VERY LATE FROM THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

The steamship Tennessee, Capt. TENNLEFAUGH, from Aspinwall via Key West, arrived at this port yesterday with 800 passengers and $8,800 in specie.

The Tennessee arrived at San Juan Del Norte on the [illegible], and at Aspinwall on the 9th. Her passengers came on board until the next morning and left by rail for Panama at 10 A. M.

On the morning of the 9th P. M., passengers arrived from Panama in the Star, New-York, and the Tennessee left Aspinwall at 6 P. M.

At San Juan, United States sloop-of-war Saratoga, [illegible] sloop-of-war Decatur, Cyane, Vixen, Independence, and Fenimore. At Aspinwall, United States steamer Cyane.

The Sierra Nevada met the Orizaba off Cerros Island, [illegible] before San Francisco, on the evening of Feb. 26, passed her and found all well.

The Tennessee did not touch at San Juan on her return, but touched at Key West for coal March 16.

The affairs of Walker in Nicaragua remain very [illegible] as before. Walker held Rivas. The allies at St. George. Walker has attacked St. George twice, without effect. Col. Cayuse, who [illegible] from the Rangers to San Juan del Sur, to escort a [illegible], was attacked on his return by a [illegible] of Costa Ricans, and driven into San Juan. He left again on the 7th, the day the Sierra Nevada left, with 70 recruits from San Francisco.

[illegible] Serapiqui, and attempted [illegible]. The expedition failed owing to the cowardice of Col. Titus. The enemy burned Castillo, but [illegible] left. Lockridge recovered one of the [illegible] he had burned. Lockridge has his camp [illegible] Castillo Island, a short distance below Castillo, with a garrison at Serapiqui, commanded by Col. Anderson. Titus has left him and gone [illegible].

Walker News from Both Sides.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times

ASPINWALL, Tuesday, March, 10, 1857.

You need not be surprised at my writing you from Aspinwall. I had a presentiment that an early delivery of the latest news from San Juan del Norte and the Pacific side, in relation to the movements of the Walker forces and those of the Allies required me to leave for Aspinwall. I followed its prompting, and I am rejoiced that I did so, for had I waited at Greytown for the return of the Tennessee to San Juan Harbor, I should have waited near a month, and I understood a hint given on board the steamer, which I believed indicated that the Tennessee would not return to San Juan del Norte on her next trip home to New-York. Now for the news.

When I wrote you last, the Walker forces under [illegible] had taken Serapiqui, which [illegible] located on the Island of Providence, called by some San Carlos Island, which [illegible] connected with Fort San Carlos, the [illegible] of the entrance to Lake Nicaragua, and is by far the best fortification on the line of the river, which, when Walker's forces were, is a short distance below Fort Castillo. They have not proceeded any farther up since. From the position of the two armies then, you had good reason to anticipate an early evacuation by the allies of Fort Castillo. They had passed the basin, and destroyed the town by fire. Everything appeared as if they intended to [illegible] as soon as the Walker forces should have attacked them. But they did not. After having succeeded so far as to obtain a landing for the force under the immediate command of Col. Titus, Col. Lockridge, with Col. Anderson and his force, returned to Fort Serapiqui. Col. Titus was left to take Fort Castillo, and as he was in good position, it was believed his force was more than adequate to the task. So thought Col. Titus. After getting several pieces of artillery into position so as to command the entrance to the fort, he held a parley with the Allies. He asked them to evacuate. They did not say no. They asked the privilege of sending a messenger through his lines to inform Gen. Mora of their offer. The Colonel consented, provided they would return in [illegible] on the following morning. The Colonel says they did so promptly; and although he has [illegible] considered them in no way entitled to credit, when their interest was at stake, strange to say he let the messenger pass. The Colonel then lay back upon the laurels won by him in Kansas, using the [illegible] evacuation of Castillo in the morning as a pillow. The morning came, and with it Gen. Mora, with a large force of Costa Ricans, who awoke the Colonel by the unpleasant sound of their firearms.

The Colonel was so surprised, and so were his men. The enemy [illegible] him hard, and he had not anticipated such a [illegible] of their kind. He was very much surprised, and so he ran away. Some say the Colonel received assurances of prospective but difficult-to-be-realized reinforcements, from an officer of the fort, for letting the messenger pass, and that the evacuation by him of San Carlos Island, instead of the entrance, by him, of Castillo, was but an afterpiece, understood by the principals. But I think he was out-maneuvered by the allies. He lost several men, but I have not been able to ascertain the precise number.

When the Colonel and his men reached Fort Serapiqui, and Colonel Lockridge, Colonel Anderson and the other courageous officers there, had been informed of his defeat, you may imagine their bitter disappointment. Colonel Lockridge looked sad, and Colonel Anderson (a gallant officer) is said to have used a very strong term in immediate connection with a [illegible] not at all complimentary to Colonel Titus as a commander.

On the 3d of March the steamer Rescue left Serapiqui for San Juan, where she arrived in safety, having the hull of the steamer Scott in tow, and a number who were on their way to the United States. Col. Titus, you will not be surprised to learn, was among the number. He said he was "going round to Gen. Walker." Perhaps so. But before leaving the Colonel distinguished himself again. When the Rescue arrived, she was boarded by a British officer, who, as usual, offered British protection to all who desired it. Col. Titus, being in a bad humor in consequence of the unfavorable light in which his unfortunate movement above, was looked upon by his brother officers, used some abusive words to the officer. Misfortunes never come singly. The British officer retired, but returned soon afterwards and conveyed the poor Colonel on board the H. B. M. frigate Cossack; while the little Rescue was hauled alongside the gun-boat Victor. This was bad, but it could not be avoided. The Colonel had to wait on board until a gun-boat was sent to the Commander of the fleet, Capt. Eskrine, who was on board the line-of-battle ship Orion, at Pearl Key Lagoon. He arrived on the following morning, when the Colonel and the Rescue were released. This is all of importance that transpired down to the time I left for Aspinwall in the Tennessee.

Since coming at Aspinwall I have obtained the following concerning the operations on the Pacific side: Since Gen. Walker returned to Rivas from San Juan del Sur, he has had several skirmishes with the Allies, in which, however, he did not lose many men. The most important, before the last fight at Rivas, was the bombardment of San Jurge. Gen. Walker sent out a detachment with artillery to fire on the town—not, as is asserted—with the intention of taking it, but simply by way of intimidating the Allies. After firing a few shots the Walker force fell back upon Rivas with some loss.

THE ATTACK ON RIVAS.

On the 6th of March the Allies surrounded and attacked Rivas—Gen. Walker's head-quarters. They are reported to have been about 2,000 strong. The first attack was made upon the Arsenal, from which they were driven, after standing three rounds of canister. The next charge was made near the hospital, on the north side of the town. And here again the Allies were driven back with great loss. In the third attack all their remaining forces were concentrated, on the south side, near the Quartermaster's office. They were allowed to approach very near to the plaza, up the narrow streets, and when there a cannonade was opened upon them, which destroyed a large number. They stood ten rounds of canister before they retreated. Their loss is estimated at 500. The remainder fell back upon their fortifications at San Jurge.

SIR ROBERT MCCLURE AMONG THE FILLIBUSTERS.

By the kindness of Lieut. Col. RAWLE I have been permitted to copy the following report of a difficulty between Sir ROBERT MCCLURE and Capt. FAYSSOUX, of the Nicaraguan army:

At 6 o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, Feb. 10, 1857, the First Lieutenant of the British man-of-war Esk, Sir ROBERT MCCLURE, Commanding, went on board the Nicaraguan schooner of war Granada, Capt. C. J. FAYSSOUX, when the following conversation took place between him and the Captain:

Lieut. DAWKINS—Sir ROBERT MCCLURE has sent me on board your vessel, and wishes to know by what authority you fly a flag which is not known to any nation—and also where your commission is; and orders me to take you on board H. M. S. Esk, to show your commission to Sir ROBERT MCCLURE.

Capt. FAYSSOUX—I have my commission below in the cabin, but will not go on board the Esk to show it. I am in the service of the Nicaraguan Government, and fly the flag of that Government. If you can compel me to show my commission and papers, I will do so on the deck of my own vessel, under protest, but it is beneath my dignity to go on board your vessel with them, and I will do so under no circumstances.

Lieut. DAWKINS—I will tell Sir ROBERT what you have said, and warn you, if you attempt to go out of the harbor in the night, I will sink you.

Captain FAYSSOUX—Should I have occasion, or my duty call me outside, I will do so, regardless of your threats.

Lieut. DAWKINS—But my guns are shotted and loaded with shell, and we will blow you up. I shall go on board the Sta Mary's and tell the officer that if they hear any firing during the night, not to be alarmed; it will be nothing only our sinking the schooner.

Captain FAYSSOUX—Can't help that, Sir.

Lieut. DAWKINS then proceeded on board the Esk, and returned in a few minutes, when conversation was resumed.

Lieut. DAWKINS—I have seen Sir ROBERT. He says you must show your commission to me, and what is your authority for showing the colors which you fly.

Capt. FAYSSOUX—I would, under no circumstances, show my authority, had I a vessel one-half your size, or in any way able to contend against you. You see how I am situated, with a small vessel and a small crew. As it is, I show it to you; but understand me, I do it under protest. I cannot understand why you have taken these proceedings, and must say you are decidedly taking sides with my enemy.

Capt. FAYSSOUX here showed Lieut. DAWKINS his commission, and other papers.

Lieut. DAWKINS—I will tell Sir ROBERT that I have seen your papers, and, if they are not satisfactory, you will be taken as a pirate.

Lieut. DAWKINS then went on board the Esk, and returning on board the Granada, said, "Sir ROBERT MCCLURE says you must come on board with your commission; if you refuse, I am ordered to haul your vessel alongside the Esk, and send you on board. [Lieut. DAWKINS had lines in his boat for the purpose of towing the Granada alongside.

Capt. FAYSSOUX—I will not go on board your vessel with my commission. I am weak and powerless in relation to you, but I protest against your threat. My wishes to conciliate in all matters with other nations.

Lieut. DAWKINS—If I make use of these men [pointing to his boat's crew] in hauling your vessel alongside mine, will you make any resistance?

Capt. FAYSSOUX—Certainly, I will resist you. You have not force sufficient to take me.

Capt. DAWKINS—The guns of the Esk are pointed at you, and it is very easy for me to bring on board a couple of hundred men; resistance would be madness. Would your men stick to you?

Capt. FAYSSOUX—My men will stick by me, and you will have to bring a much larger force than I have before you can take me. When you bring such a force, and I see that resistance would be madness, I will surrender.

Lieut. DAWKINS—Have you any objection to my speaking to yur crew?

Capt. FAYSSOUX—None whatever. Men, step aft here, this gentleman wishes to talk to you.

Lieut. DAWKINS—Well, men, I am going to sink this vessel as a pirate, and my boat will take on shore such of you as wish to go and save your lives. Will you go?

CREW—No, sink and be d——d.

Lieut. DAWKINS—You see our guns are bearing on you, they are loaded with shell and will blow you all up. Do you still persist in remaining on the vessel?

CREW—Yes, and will go to hell in her. Shell don't hurt much.

Lieut. DAWKINS then went on board the Esk and returned, said "It is customary when a man-of-war comes into port for the commanders of other vessels of war to pay the new arrival a visit. The Captain of the American sloop-of-war St. Mary's sent on board my vessel, and his visit was returned this morning. You did not call, and as none of the crew or officers of my vessel had ever seen your flag before, we did not know what it meant."

Capt. FAYSSOUX—When you came on last evening, I did not omit visiting you from a want of etiquette. But I hoisted my flag, which I thought was sufficient I do not know by what right you force me to show my commission.

Lieut. DAWKINS—Will you come on board my vessel now and see the Captain, with your commission, when the matter can be settled.

Capt. FAYSSOUX—If you force me to go on board your vessel I will go. But not with my commission. I would suffer my arms to be cut off rather than submit to such an indignity.

Lieut. DAWKINS—Will you come on board the Esk with me as a friend, with your commission. You can see the Captain, who says he will be glad to see you on board, and will be happy to make your acquaintance. Get into my boat now, as a friend, and come long with me.

Capt. FAYSSOUX—I will be happy to go on board with you as a friend, but not with my commission.

Lieut. DAWKINS—Well, get into my boat now, and go off with me as a friend.

Capt. FAYSSOUX—I will be on board in my own boat in a few minutes.

The Captain went on board and had a very pleasant time.

Subsequently Sir ROBERT visited Gen. WALKER at Rivas. The General received him coolly at first, but finally they came to a better understanding, and held a long conversation; after which Sir ROBERT returned to his ship.

I have also received the following from the Adjutant-General of Gen. WALKER's army, with the promise that I would send it to you.

REPORT.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, RIVAS, Wednesday, Feb. 25, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Inclosed I send you a list of the different detachments which have at various times joined the army under General WALKER. Many erroneous reports, arising from prejudice and malignity, having been put in circulation relative to the army of this Republic, I have to request the publication of this list, to remove from the minds of citizens of the United States the false impressions produced by such injurious statements. Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
P. W. R. THOMPSON.
Adjutant-General Nicaraguan Army.

NOTE.—The recruits (prangs) are all disbanded, deserted or dead. Capt. O'COURLAY's command have been all killed but two. The recruits that arrived Aug. 22, 1856, were mostly Europeans—supposed killed or deserted, but not reported. The recruits that arrived Oct. 20, 1856, are supposed killed or deserted—no reports. To the number joined as herein stated, are to be added above 100 who joined singly, recruited and others employed in the different staff departments of the army. Of the 141 unaccounted for, about 70 should be added to the killed.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, RIVAS, Feb. 24, 1857.

The above rapid summary gives all the intelligence which is at all valuable that will go out by this steamer.

Yours, truly,

Colonel Titus' Account of Affairs—Interesting Rumors and Speculations.

Extract of a Letter from SAN JUAN DEL NORTE, Saturday, March 7, 1857.

Colonel TITUS arrived here a few days ago in an incontestibly high state of dudgeon against several of his brother officers operating upon the River San Juan. He denounces Colonel LOCKRIDGE, and says he is not equal to his position, and that if he had been properly supported in the attack which he led in person, on Castillo, his command would not have experienced such a sanguinary failure. He further says that the climate, heat, and incessant wet, is playing the very devil with the men, who are becoming much discouraged.

The attack on Castillo was made with 295 men, and lasted several hours, but as the Costa Ricans kept up such an infernal "fire," he was compelled to retreat three times during the engagement. Lost 28 killed and 19 wounded.

Col. TITUS urges WALKER's friends to send without delay strong reinforcements, as he feels certain with the present complement of men the River San Juan cannot be forced, and until fresh arrivals Castillo was not to be attempted again.

The Costa Ricans are in a strong body at Castillo, and being commanded by Capt. SPENCER and Col. CAYUS, displayed considerable bravery. Their gunning he describes as very steady and sure.

The Colonel leaves by the Tennessee for Aspinwall, in hopes of reaching WALKER via Panama, with the intention of recommending to Gen. WALKER to place the command of the San Juan forces in abler hands. Several disasters have made their way down here and give rather sad accounts. During the attacks on Hippe Point, at the mouth of the Seripiqui, LOCKRIDGE's loss, 12 men killed and some 30 wounded—the wounded have mostly since died for want of proper medical treatment and places to house them in. The Costa Ricans retreated up the San Juan per steamer Morgan to Castillita carrying off their wounded and most of the ammunition. Col. F. ANDERSON is stationed at Hippe Point with 75 men—LOCKRIDGE is with the main force on the Isle of Providence—a small island opposite the mouth of the River San Carlos, down which stream the Costa Ricans came when they captured the River steamers and forts on the San Juan. An attack is expected from this same quarter again, and all was on the "qui vive."

From WALKER there is no news since the Costa Ricans got possession of the River, except such as you have received via Aspinwall.

SCOTT, the agent of the party, say chances now are sadly against them. They are enraged at the Morgan Garrison party, for forsaken them in the midst of their troubles, and regret having deserted Vanderbilt's flag.

Many here think this is the best time for Commodore VANDERBILT to step forward to aid WALKER. By doing so the Commodore could now dictate his own terms about the Transit Route, and might rely upon good faith being kept with him.

Walker News at Panama.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PANAMA, Tuesday, March 10, 1857.

The Sierra Nevada arrived here this morning, having left San Juan del Sur on the 7th. The United States sloop-of-war St. Mary's was at San Juan.

It is almost impossible to get anything from anybody, from Nicaragua, in which confidence can be placed. I have found, however, one of WALKER's men, who is furloughed or discharged on account of a disabled arm, who appears to be a reliable witness, or who at least is not disposed to exaggerate against WALKER. Besides, I questioned him on matters connected with WALKER's forces within my own knowledge, to test him, and found him to be correct. In the few minutes I had to converse with him, I could not get dates, but learned the following general facts:

WALKER had had, during the past month, several skirmishes with the Costa Ricans, attacking or reconnoitering them in their quarters at St. George, one league from Rivas, in all of which he was defeated and driven back. Once he attempted to move down to St. George some gun boxes filled with sand, for barricades, behind which to place cannon. The enemy attacked him, took his boxes and killed and badly wounded not less than 50 of his little force. At another time Colonel CAYUSE was ordered down to San Juan del Sur with a mail guarded by 30 men. He was attacked by 400 men on his return, on the Transit road, four miles from San Juan, lost two men, and was obliged to go back. WALKER, hearing of this mishap, sent General SANDERS, with 150 men, out on the transit, by way of the cross-road of the Jocote ranch, where they fell in with the Costa Ricans. After a severe fight, in which SANDERS lost 50 men killed, he was forced to retreat to Rivas. Some say he only reached Rivas with 50 men.

The officers of the Sierra Nevada bring a report that the Costa Ricans attacked WALKER at Rivas on the evening of the 4th March, on three sides of the city. That WALKER waited until they got into the narrow streets, and then swept them with his cannon, slaughtering an immense number. This news they say was brought down to San Juan del Sur by a native boy. At the time the boy left Rivas, the report goes, WALKER was piling up and burning the dead bodies. This may or may not be true. I am satisfied of one thing, however, from personal observation while at Rivas the last of January—that is, if they did attack WALKER in Rivas, they were defeated with large loss.

My informant, the soldier before alluded to, says that since the 1st of February, when I wrote you that WALKER had only 800 fighting men or less, he has lost in killed, wounded, and by desertion, 400 men—leaving him, with the 80 men the Sierra Nevada brought this trip, less than 500 effective soldiers. This soldier belonged to Captain GASCOIGNE's company. He gives, as an example of the desertions, that 12 of his company deserted at the battle of St. George, Feb. 18, and 15 more deserted in one body the first part of March, from the same company. Three men who deserted from one company were taken and shot at San Juan Viego—and a Frenchman, who was acting as guide for them into Costa Rica, was shot at Rivas. Of course, I cannot get the names of WALKER's officers killed.

F. W. R.

A Chat with Col. Jacques, R. A.

The Colonel arrived by the Tennessee yesterday, and is stopping at the Astor House. He was severely injured at the battle of San George, having been shot through the hips. He is still an invalid, and has come here on leave of absence, hoping to recruit his energies. He states that he left Rivas on the 4th of March, and, in company with Capt. COURSE, traveled to San Juan del Sur, without molestation, then took the Sierra Nevada to Panama, thence, by rail, to Aspinwall. WALKER and his men are, he says, in excellent health and spirits—have plenty to eat, to drink and to wear. They have the sympathies of the natives, who furnish provisions in abundance from the surrounding country. The General has so fortified his position, says the Colonel, that it would require a much superior force to any that can be raised in Central America to dislodge him. He has an army there of full 1,100 men, between 600 and 700 of whom are tip-top soldiers. The armament consists of nine pieces of artillery and four mortars.

The allies are encamped in strong force but two miles from Rivas, and, on the night of the 5th, a desperate attack was made on WALKER's position. The next day, however, WALKER wrote to Col. CASEY that he did not lose one man, and that the enemy had been repulsed with great loss.

Col. JACQUES thinks that Col. TITUS has shown himself a great coward, or at least an arrant fool in retreating from Castillo after he had invested it, and believes that he has gone to California, for he would scarcely dare meet the "grey-eyed man" after his bad management on that occasion. He thinks, too, that WALKER, as soon as sufficient reinforcements shall reach him, will march into Costa Rica. Seventy recruits came down in the Sierra Nevada and joined WALKER at Rivas.

Statement of an Assistant Commissary Sergeant in General Walker's Army.

Mr. CLAIBORNE WILSON, one of the passengers by the Tennessee, has furnished us with the following statement: I left New-York on the 6th of April last on the Orizaba and arrived in Greytown on the 16th of the same month. My intention was to go to California; but in consequence of the Costa Ricans having possession of the Transit Route the passengers of the Orizaba, some six hundred in number, were detained at Granada a month, some of my family who accompanied me being taken sick during this time, and it was impossible for me to leave with the Orizaba's passengers. My original design of going to California was thus frustrated, and I remained at Granada till the town was burned in November last. Since that time I resided in Rivas till my return by the Tennessee on her present trip. Granada was in possession of General WALKER when I first arrived there. At that time he had a force of nearly 1,000 men stationed there, and plenty of arms and provisions. After the departure of the Orizaba's passengers, I obtained a place in the Commissary Department of General WALKER's army as Assistant Commissary Sergeant. My business was to assist in the gathering in and delivering rations intended for the army and dispersing them daily among the soldiers. The officers presented written requisitions for the provisions they needed, and could draw a week or month's supply as they choose. They paid for the provisions they received, which were charged to their account and deducted from their salary. This was the case from Gen. WALKER down to the lowest commissioned officer. At this time the salary of General WALKER was $400 a month; of a colonel, $250 a month; of a captain, $150 a month; and of a lieutenant, $100 a month. These were the salaries paid to the original fifty-six men who accompanied General WALKER when he first set out from California for Nicaragua. At this time, also, privates received $100 a month. A ration then was estimated at thirty-five cents a day. It comprised 1¼ pounds of beef, 2 ounces of coffee, 4 ounces of sugar, 4 ounces of rice, 3 ounces of beans, and 2 tortillas, a species of corn-bread made by the natives. The provisions were mainly obtained from the natives, and were brought there for a market. Cash was then paid for all the food bought. There was an abundant supply of liquor, consisting of brandy, wine, gin, rum and aguadiente. The liquor was supplied occasionally to the soldiers, but, as a general thing, they had to purchase what they wanted to use. The officers indulged very freely, and there is no doubt but that a great part of the sickness among the officers and soldiers arose from the intemperate use in the outset. The army had good houses to live in, the buildings they occupied being those formerly inhabited by the Chimoristas, who had deserted the town, and had gone over to the enemy. General WALKER and his staff occupied one of the best buildings, and one commanding the best view of the town.

The discipline exercised over the army of Granada was quite rigid. All the soldiers were compelled to drill twice a day. The general life was that which would ordinarily be seen among an encampment of soldiers. Gen. WALKER kept an eye upon them, and would frequently drop in upon a company enjoying themselves too merrily and administer a quiet rebuke. I remained in my position as Assistant Commissary Sergeant only a month. During the balance of my stay in Granada I was engaged in carting both for the Government and private citizens. I found that the latter position, though not quite as honorable as the office I held under General WALKER, was altogether more remunerative, and for that reason I resigned my former position.

The first active engagement in which General WALKER's army participated after my arrival there was an attack on the San Jacinto Ranche, about forty miles from Granada. A force of sixty men went from Granada under the command of WILEY MARSHALL. They met with a defeat with a loss of almost half their number. On the 15th of October, nearly a month after this expedition, Gen. WALKER, with 300 men, marched upon Managua, and attacked the town. He was pushing his attack strenuously, and, it was stated, was on the point of routing the enemy, when he received a message that an attack was being made, by the hostile forces, upon Granada. He directly marched back for Granada, starting at 1 o'clock in the morning. He reached Granada at 10 o'clock on the 13th of October, and speedily succeeded in repulsing the enemy. Meanwhile the remnant of WALKER's army, some 200 in number, and the citizens of Granada, had fought valiantly in defence of the place. I had a hand in this defence myself. The attacking party consisted of 800 men, who were subsequently reinforced with 250 men. The mode of defence adopted was to possess ourselves of the most prominent houses on the plaza. As it was, the enemy plundered everything they could find in the remaining houses, ravished the women, and committed all the horrid barbarities of war of which they were capable. The loss sustained by General WALKER's army up to the time of the routing of the enemy was 18 men. The total loss of the enemy was 60 men.

The burning and siege of Granada commenced on the 17th of November. Mr. WILSON corroborates the details of this siege as published heretofore in the TIMES. Subsequent to the siege he went with Gen. WALKER's army to St. George. At this time the enemy was in possession of Rivas, but in a few days they evacuated the place, after which Gen. WALKER moved thither with his army, and has continued to make it his head-quarters up to the present time. The enemy, after evacuating Rivas, took possession of St. George and fortified it. The whole force of Gen. WALKER at Rivas was comprised of about 700 men, officers and privates. The enemy's force at St. George was stated as being from 1,200 to 1,500 men. Since the encampment of the Costa Ricans at St. George, Gen. WALKER's army had made three attacks upon the town. The first attack was about the middle of January last. Gen. WALKER sent up about 400 men under command of Gen. HENNINGSEN, Col. CASEY, and Major DELAND. The First Rifles, that were ordered to make the charge, gained a favorable position for carrying the attack, but from not being supported by the infantry as expected, they were obliged to fall back, and did so with a loss of 15 men and 30 wounded. The loss of the enemy was considerable. The second attack was made by General WALKER, with a force of about 350 men. He attacked the town in the night, and hoped to take the place by surprise. This attack resulted, like the former one, in a retreat and loss of about 25 men and 40 wounded. The enemy were prepared for the attack and an animated fight ensued, lasting till after daylight. General WALKER's men were repulsed several times, but continued to renew the charge till, from the serious loss of his officers, the General finally ordered an abandonment of the attack. Among the officers of General WALKER killed, were Captain RUSSELL, Lieut. GARILE, Major DUSENBURY, Col. O'NEIL, Col. LEONARD, and Lieut. BLACKMAN were mortally wounded. Among the wounded was Col. JAQUES. Within four or five days of the preceding attack a third attack was attempted—General WALKER also in command at this time. On this occasion Gen. WALKER took with him two pieces of artillery, one howitzer, and a six-pounder. They made the attack by throwing round shot and shells in the town and against the barricades. After throwing a hundred round shot, and a full shells, he retreated without any loss of his own men, and about 70 of the enemy killed and a large number wounded. The attack was intended as an experiment—more than anything else—to try the effect of the round shot upon the barricades. The above, with the exception of slight skirmishing among the pickets, were the only recent engagements in which Gen. WALKER had been engaged up to the 12th of March, two days before Mr. WILSON left San Juan del Sur. On the last date mentioned, Gen. WALKER sent Gen. SANDERS, with 400 men, to San Juan del Sur to receive a company of recruits expected to arrive by the steamer Sierra Nevada. On the way they were attacked by a force of 240 Costa Ricans. The latter army was victorious, and beat back Gen. SANDERS, occasioning him considerable loss. General S. put back to Rivas. At the same time, another portion of the Costa Rican army made an attack on Rivas, but were repelled, losing between 400 and 600 men. The intelligence of this last attack was brought to San Juan del Sur by a courier, and reached there on the day the Tennessee left that port.

Mr. WILSON left Rivas, General WALKER's present head-quarters, the 15th of February last. General WALKER had then with him a force of only 800 effective men and about 140 sick and wounded. The men, including officers as well as privates, were loud in their complaints against WALKER. They say that they have no pay and not enough to eat. The Government made no pretension to pay any debts, and he believed the obvious reason was because they had no money. He held personally against the Government claims to the amount of $300, of which he could not get a cent's pay. As matters stood he considered WALKER's prospect as very doubtful. He could not hold his present position without reinforcements of men, money and provisions.

He left New-Orleans about the 28th December last, in company with 227 others, under the command of Col. MANCOUSE. He had been induced to leave a good business by the representations of the recruiting officers at New-Orleans. They told him of the beautiful country, the fine climate, &c., and that he would get $35 a month, and at the expiration of a year he would be put in possession of 160 acres of good land. A friend of his, named SMITH, also was induced to go to the promised land, and they left home with good clothes and a large amount of money. They arrived at Punta Arenas on the 4th of January, and were there joined by 40 recruits from New-York. They remained at this point over two weeks, and were transferred to the command of Col. ANDERSON.

As soon as the little steamer Rescue was put in order, his detachment went up in her to a point twenty-five miles up the River San Juan, six miles below Fort Serapiqui, where they encamped, and called the place Fort Anderson. There they were joined by Col. TITUS' command, which swelled their ranks to 400 men. On the 6th of February they were attacked by a force of 500 Costa Ricans, whom they repulsed with great slaughter. The loss on their side was 5 killed and 17 wounded.

His friend SMITH was among the killed. He asked leave the next day to go with a party to bury his friend. The officer seemed reluctant to let him, when he (BROWN) stated that his comrade had $ BOSTON, Friday, March 20.

The Cunard mail steamship Alps, from Liverpool on the 8 P. M. on the 4th inst., arrived at Boston, on Thursday, New-York, at 3:15 yesterday morning. Her advices are four days later than those received by the Africa.

The steamship Africa arrived out at Liverpool on the 3d inst., and the steamship City of Baltimore on the 4th.

The Africa would sail from Liverpool on the morning of Saturday, the 7th inst., for this port, and the Canadian at the same time for St. John's, N. F., Halifax, and Portland, Me.

She also passed, on the 6th inst., the steamer Europa, 200 miles west of Cape Clear.

The news by this arrival is interesting.

In the House of Commons on Tuesday the 3d inst., the Government was defeated on Mr. CORDEN's motion regarding the operations at Canton. The vote stood 263 for the motion, and 247 against it. It was not thought, however, that Lord PALMERSTON would resign, but a dissolution of Parliament was expected to take place in May.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post writing on the 3d, says:

"The basis of a treaty between Persia and England are not yet signed. Hostilities are suspended, but there is no regular armistice. No representations have been or will be made at Teheran by the friendly powers until the basis of the treaty are signed."

The Paris correspondent of the London Times telegraphs the 3d:

"The Treaty of Peace with Persia has been signed this day."

Mr. J. F. CRAMPTON, late British Minister to the United States has been appointed British Minister to the King of Hanover.

The Paris Journal says: We learn by the latest news from China, under date of Dec. 15, that the Court of Pekin has published a decree prohibiting all subjects of the Celestial Empire from trading with the English. Disobedience is to be punished with death.

Hong Kong dates, by the Oriental mail, are to the 30th of January. There appear to have been no further operations against Canton. Dispatches from Sir JOHN BOWRING and Admiral SEYMOUR give accounts of the attempt made to take Teatotum Fort, and of an attack upon the British shipping by a vast number of Chinese junks.

The attack was well-concerted, and made at low water, when the large men-of-war could not safely maneuvre, but it was brilliantly repelled. Sir MICHAEL SEYMOUR had thought it wise to abandon his post at the Dutch Folly and the Factory Gardens, and had strengthened his positions at the forts lower down the river. Five hundred men were expected at Singapore. The details of the massacre of the Europeans on board the Thistle are also communicated in these dispatches. On the 12th of January, the whole of the suburbs west of Canton were burnt by the British forces. A large fire had also taken place inside the city. The Mandarins have issued in various districts the most blood-thirsty edicts against the English, and have offered large rewards to those who may succeed in assassination or incendiarism in Hong Kong.

All the Chinese have been ordered to quit the service of foreigners and return to their homes; and so powerful is the Mandarin system that disobedience will cause trouble if not positive destruction upon the relatives of the offender. The consequence is that nearly all the Chinese servants have left or are leaving.

The Spanish Ministry has addressed a note to the representatives of Spain at the European courts, explaining the quarrel with Mexico. Having mentioned the murders and robberies committed on the persons and goods of Spanish subjects residing in Mexico, by the soldiers of General ALVAREZ, the present chief of the Mexican Republic, the note declares that the Spanish Government does not desire to make the people and the Government of Mexico responsible for these atrocious acts, if the Mexican Government would only take energetic steps to repair them. In this spirit the Spanish Legation in Mexico has been instructed to demand from the Mexican Government the punishment of the offenders and the indemnification of the Spanish subjects who have been the victims. But at the same time, fearing that this demand is not complied with, the Spanish Government has ordered the departure of vessels of war and troops from the Havana in sufficient strength for the protection of Spanish subjects. Five vessels of war, with troops, likewise leave Spain to reinforce the squadron at the Havana. The expedition will altogether consist of 40 vessels of war, and will have a numerous army on board. The Spanish Government deplores the necessity of resorting to such measures towards a nation united to Spain in blood, language and religion; but it hopes everybody will acknowledge the obligation it is under to avenge the national dignity.

Denmark has dispatched her reply to the notes of Prussia and Austria on the subject of the Duchies. The important point in this reply is that the Danish Government rejects the demands of the two German Powers, declines the intervention of the Germanic Diet, and declares in a certain measure that the King is decided on maintaining the rights confided to him by God and the nation. This reply has produced a most unfavorable impression at Berlin.

A dispatch from Berne of the 28th ult. states that the authorities of Neufchatel are apprehensive of a new attempt on the part of the Royalists. The Republican officers have assembled in council on the subject. The militia has received instructions to hold itself in readiness for events. The posts have been doubled, and the gendarmerie reinforced by the guides.

IMPORTANT PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

Renewed Debate on the China War.

THE VOTE OF THE GOVERNMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Tuesday, March 3.

In resuming the debate on Mr. CORDEN's motion, Mr. RODERICK PALMER said, it being by no means difficult to justify a vote in support of the resolution proposed by Mr. CORDEN, that the Chinese had given us no ground of complaint, it was indispensable that the Government should justify the beginning of hostilities by showing that the Chinese had been guilty of a violation of their duty toward Great Britain. It had been admitted that the British flag by itself was wholly irrelevant to the question as to the criminality of the Arrow; it must be shown that by the crime was an English merchant vessel, and if this were not the case, there was no justification whatever for the hostilities. A British lorcha without a British register was not a British vessel; for he denied the position of the Attorney-General that the vessel was British because the owner was resident at Hong Kong. If this were true, by a parity of reasoning, an Englishman residing at Canton or Shanghai might transport a Chinese character to his ship, a Chinese which, as he argued at some length, would lead to absurd consequences. To the vessel in question any other ground besides ownership of the register character could be impressed only by the colonial ordinance, and, admitting that ordinance to be legal, the register granted under it had expired, and he maintained that the ownership of the register was absolutely fatal to the case. There could be no mistake; Sir JOHN BOWRING must have understood the matter; he knew and confessed that the protection under the register was gone. Upon the general question, much, he observed, had been said of the crimes of the Chinese, the vexations practised by Englishmen in China, and the views of the Chinese Government; but the true bearing of these remarks, in his opinion, was not that we could persevere in the course we had taken, but if we dealt with a people who were misgoverned, imperfectly civilized, and easily provoked to outrage and violence, that we should be more entitled to claim the exercise of humanity and moderation in our dealings towards them, instead of asserting our power, and, after obtaining reasonable reparation, [laughter] inflicting further damage.

Mr. GLADSTONE discussed the question of this question upon constitutional grounds. When the papers were laid upon the table, the Executive Government invited the opinion of the House upon their conduct, and the resolution affirmed that the papers failed to establish satisfactory grounds for the violent measures resorted to at Canton. He noticed the objections to the resolution, grounded upon the effect it would exert upon the people of Canton and upon the opinion of the European merchants in China, contending that it was not correct to impute to the general mercantile community of England the opinions of those who were connected with the opium and and tea trades of China, and who might, he said, be swayed by their interests. Nothing more convinced him of the propriety of the resolution than that the great body of the Conservative party supported it. Applying himself more directly to the question, he asked why no attempt had been made to refer the matter to the Emperor of China, who might have reprimanded Commissioner YEH? Instead of this, hostilities were at once commenced, which made it difficult for the Emperor to do us justice. With regard to the nationality of the lorcha, he cited a dictum of Dr. LUSHINGTON, to the effect that it was not competent to any State, by its own regulations, at once to change the national character of a vessel to the detriment of other States, which confirmed, he said, the view taken by Lord LYNDHURST of this question, that this country had no right to convert a Chinese ship into a British ship.

After some remarks from divers other speakers—

Mr. ROEBUCK recognized this as a vote of censure, not simply upon the officials at Canton, but upon Lord PALMERSTON and his colleagues. Why? Because they had approved all the acts of those officials; they had assumed the responsibility, and the House ought to fix that responsibility upon them. The Attorney-General, he said, had argued, as if he had a retaining fee, a question which ought to be argued upon the principles of morality and humanity; and, supposing the law to be as he had put it, were the people of England, he asked, prepared to take upon themselves the responsibility of the proceedings at Canton? If the Chinese were wrong, they erred in common with great luminaries of the law in this country, and why should they be punished, their houses shattered and their relatives butchered? But we had alleged another plea—the Chinese, it was said, had broken the treaty? He wanted to know if there had been no breach of the treaty on our part. Their refusal to let us enter the city should be dealt with tenderly.

Mr. GLADSTONE vindicated himself and Sir J. GRAHAM from being supposed to be parties to the appointment of Sir JOHN BOWRING; but he protested against the making Sir JOHN a stalking-horse to divert the attention of the House from the real matter at issue, which involved the interests of humanity and the honor of England. He adverted with warmth and severity to the remarks made by Sir G. GREY upon Sir J. GRAHAM in relation to that appointment, and to some imputations cast upon him by Mr. BENTINCK and Mr. KENDALL, and, approaching the subject under discussion, he cleared it of matters which, he considered, had been substantially abandoned or disproved. One of these matters was that expressed in the cabalistic phrase "Insults by China," the volume recording which did not support, he asserted, the proposition that we had fostering wrongs against the Chinese. He reminded the House that no answer had been given to the objection that, if a wrong had been committed by the Chinese in the case of the Arrow, the proper remedy was by reprisals. The Attorney-General had declined to deal with the question of the title founded upon our municipal law; the only document, he had alleged, was the treaty, and under that, if at all, the case against the lorcha must be made out. But he (Mr. GLADSTONE) denied that there was any authority for that position, which rested upon the doctrine of the Attorney-General, that the term "British subjects," in the treaty, meant any Chinese resident at Hong Kong. When we talked of treaty obligations by the Chinese, what were our treaty obligations towards them? The purpose for which Hong Kong was given to us was that it should be a port in which British ships might careen and refit. Was not our contraband trade in opium a breach of treaty obligations? Had our Government struggled to put it down, as bound by treaty? Had they not encouraged it by organizing a fleet of lorchas under the British flag? They, he said, who put the British flag to the uses to which it was put in China stained that flag. Mr. GLADSTONE dwelt with much energy upon the calamities which the war had inflicted upon the Cantonese, a state of things, he observed, which the resolution invited the wisdom of Parliament to put an effectual check upon. For what, he asked, were we at war with the Chinese? The Government had not stated what we were asking from them. Were we afraid of the moral effect upon the Chinese if the acts of the Government were disavowed? But consider, he said, the moral impression which must now be produced, and never could be avoided. If the House had the courage to assert its prerogative, and adopted this resolution, it would pursue a course consistent at once with sound policy and the principles of eternal justice.

Lord PALMERSTON said he should not have expected from Mr. CORDEN such a motion, or such a speech in its support; nor should he have anticipated the bitterness of his attack upon Sir JOHN BOWRING, an ancient friend, a man who had raised himself by his talents, attainments and public services, and whom he (Lord PALMERSTON) thought a fit person for the situation he held. If there was any man less likely than another to get the country into hostilities, it was Sir JOHN BOWRING, who had been a member of the Peace Society. But what most surprised him in Mr. CORDEN's speech was the anti-English spirit that pervaded it, and an abnegation of the ties which bound men to their country and countrymen, which he hardly expected. With regard to the event which had given rise to this discussion, he should not go into the legal argument as to whether the vessel was English or not; this fact did not lie at the bottom of the question. We had a treaty with the Chinese stipulating that British vessels should not be boarded without a previous application to the British Consul, and the question was, what did the Chinese know or believe as to the nationality of the Arrow? Did they consider her a British vessel? He said they did, and if they knowingly violated the treaty, it was immaterial whether, according to the technicalities of the law, the register had expired. It was the animus of the insult—the willful violation of the treaty—that entitled us to demand reparation for the wrong, and an assurance of future security. He, however, thought, for reasons which he stated at some length, that the vessel was entitled to the protection of the British flag, and that the objections to the register were mere quibbles. He insisted that after the refusal of reparation—only one of many violations of treaty rights by the Chinese—hostilities were amply justified, and that our proceedings were marked with extreme forbearance compared with the proceedings of the Americans when their flag was insulted. The outrage committed upon the lorcha was, therefore, only part of a deliberate system on the part of the Chinese officials to wrest from us a right essential to our commerce in those waters. The barbarity of the local authorities at Canton, the beheading of 70,000 men in less than a year by the Commissioner and the deformities of Chinese society, were strongly urged by Lord PALMERSTON, who complained that there had been in the debate a disposition, to excuse or palliate these enormities. It had been said that reprisals should have been first resorted to, and so they were, he said, but without effect. The execution of the ulterior operations rested with Admiral SEYMOUR, who, if of opinion that they were excessive, would not have permitted them. We were not at war with China; by the last accounts the quarrel was still only local. To the question what the future policy of the Government would be, he replied that this must depend in a great measure upon the course of events; their first duty would be to protect British subjects in China. But for these events diplomatic intercourse might have been opened with Pekin, and an extension of commerce been the result, advantageous equally to China and to Europe. What—continued the speaker in conclusion—is the Government expected to do? Are we to send out to China and say, "Tell YEH that he is right. [Cheers.] Tell him that subtle lawyers have discovered by a great variety of legal technicalities that the lorcha Arrow was really not a British ship according to the imperial law, that therefore he was right in what he did, and that he may do the same again with any vessel under British colors which he may think, with what he calls reason, is liable to the same insult." [Cheers.] What would be the consequences of that? Our trade at Hong Kong and Canton would be as insecure as if pirates had gained possession of the latter city as well as of other ports. There would be no security for any British property at Canton or upon the river. [Hear, hear.] But would that be all? Why, YEH, raising a shout of triumph, would say, "These cowardly Englishmen are afraid of me. I have driven away all the barbarians that were here. They tell me that England is a great Power and has a great navy and army, but Englishmen are afraid of me. I, Commissioner YEH, will do what I like with them in future, and whether it pleases me to adorn the palisades with English rather than with Chinese heads, I will do what I please; and their property shall be plundered by whoever chooses to do so." [Cheers.] Would that state of things be confined to Canton? We have great and extensive interests at other ports as well as there. Shanghae, for example, is almost a European community. [Hear, hear.] What man will answer for the security of our people at Shanghae one fortnight after the news of the adoption of such a motion as this? [Hear, hear.] It would be a virtual casting-off of your British communities; it would be committing them to the mercy of these barbarians; it would be a public manifestation to the whole world that you are not prepared to defend by your power those whom you had induced to place themselves and their property in a foreign land. [Loud cheers.] Such a proceeding would, I say, be disgraceful to the country as well as dangerous to those whom we are bound to defend. [Cheers.] The right honorable gentleman, at the conclusion of his speech, described in very eloquent terms the opinion which, in his view, foreign nations take of the possible decision of this House. Sir, I am afraid that their view will be far different from that of the right hon. gentleman. [Hear, hear.] They will say, "Here is a Power that has been formerly great in arms, whose armies have gained victories in remote regions, whose fleets have floated triumphantly over every ocean; the people of this country are governed by a deliberate assembly—powerful, as the right hon. gentleman says, and responsible for its acts. At last a change has come over the spirit of their dream. The mighty, and [illegible] have disarmed itself of all the [illegible] army and [illegible] part of the world to think of a [illegible] Chinese ransom paid for the insolence of [illegible] war." Of course we should [illegible] by the reference, and submit to this decision.

The candid Englishmen who [illegible] so much unction and philanthropy are careful not to observe a little fact with an important bearing on the value of their comments. The intelligence of these transactions arrived about two months after the date, when it was impossible to say what further steps had been taken on either side, or would be taken before orders could get out. It takes, at the least, 90 days for a question to be answered from Canton to London, and vice versa. At this very moment we are wholly ignorant of what has been done, and many events are at least possible which would make a vote of censure most painfully ridiculous. It is quite possible that under the continued defection of our Chinese servants and fellow-subjects, through the peculiar way in which the mandarins choose to carry on the war—that is, by poisoning, assassination, and, above all, by putting to death all the relatives of those who hold to the British connection—our authorities may deem it necessary to strike a blow. There is already in the Chinese waters a greater force than is commonly imagined. Besides four American men-of-war and eight from other civilized States, there are eighteen British men-of-war, including the Calcutta, of 50 guns, the Nankin, of 50 guns, the Pique, of 36, and the Sybille, of 44, the whole force mustering more than 300 guns. Although gunboats of a low draught are much wanted for effectual military operations, still it is said that every one of these vessels could be brought to bear on Canton, and that even the Calcutta could be brought near enough to throw shells into the city. There is no knowing, then, what has been done; and they who are best acquainted with the feelings of the whole European community out there think it very likely that a much more serious blow has been struck than any which we have yet heard. For anything we know, the Chinese may ere this have been brought to reason, and a few days may bring news of a peace with China—an event not more improbable than the now happily concluded peace with Persia was but the other day. This we mention to show the utter absurdity of pretending to advise, to check, and direct our representatives out there with very great minuteness. As we have said before, we must send out the best men and give them the best instructions. But, with the whole convex world between us and them, it is simply ridiculous to attempt more than very prospective instruction, and very retrospective sanction. We must trust our agents. We must give them a general confidence. If we attempt more, the advice we send them arrives four months too late for any purpose, and the only result is to aggravate the failure, or to disorder the success. They are on the spot. They know the people. They know even the law better than our people do generally at home, and decide certainly with less factious bias than is displayed by our lawyers in Parliament. So, unless the case is very decided against them, Her Majesty's Government has no choice but to support them, and to strengthen their hands.

The greater the distance, too, and the greater the responsibility of our representatives, the less time is there for all the candid and dispassionate criticisms which these gentlemen recommend to Her Majesty's advisers. Seven weeks is the intelligence coming home, seven weeks is the dispatch going out—fourteen weeks altogether to and fro. But were it a fight in our own streets, were Ketch and his myrmidons enconced in a suburb of this metropolis, disturbing everybody that fell into his hands, there would hardly be less time for delay. Any Government would be held very culpable that deliberated more than two or three days on the question what was to be done, or that allowed a week to pass without sending reinforcements to a British Governor and Admiral at that distance in a position to require them. For our own part, we will frankly say that, even if we had felt a misgiving that all had not been done wisely, or that the British Governor and Admiral might have at least temporized a little more, we should have sent immediate aid and encouragement, at all events, and certainly not any criticisms of a sort to paralyze the movements of the men fighting our battles afar off. More than this, we feel very sure that in all the ranks of the triple Opposition—among all the men who have delivered such formal accusations or such angry tirades against the conduct of Her Majesty's Government in this affair, there is not one who, in Lord PALMERSTON's place, would not have done as he did. We are persuaded there is not one who, instead of succor and good wishes, would have sent cold advice, hungry cautions, and bitter rebukes, instead of men, ships and munitions of war. We should be ashamed to suppose ourselves quicker to stand by our countrymen, or warmer to sympathize with their difficulties, than other Englishmen, and therefore we doubt not that Lord DERBY, Mr. GLADSTONE, and Mr. CORDEN himself, would have done their best to strengthen and even encourage their fellow-countrymen against a crowd of treacherous and brutal barbarians. Three days were about all the time we should have had for the momentous decision, but we should not have wanted three. One day would have been enough, and the decision of that one day we should not have repented of. Certainly, no reason has been given for repenting of it thus far. All the repentance we owe with regard to China is the weakness of having permitted her so long to cheat us out of the fulfilment of her obligations. That we do repent; not the demand of apology for a violent outrage on a vessel under British protection, or the adoption of the only means of redress in our power. We express these feelings, not as our own alone, but as those natural to all Englishmen. The result of an appeal to the country will prove that we are not mistaken in this estimate of our national spirit; for even a triple coalition of party chiefs will not muster a majority of the British constituency round its questionable colors.

From the London Star. (Cobden's Organ.)

The speech by which Lord PALMERSTON brought his Premiership to a close was one of those efforts which left upon every ear the impression of expiring power, and Mr. DISRAELI did not fail to perceive this part of its weakness, and to avail himself of it in a few unpremeditated sentences. The voice of the Premier was sometimes unnatural from excitement; his attitude was not a little imposing, but it was proud and haughty; and the only redeeming quality of the speech as a whole, was an occasional flow of that genial nature which has made money of the efforts of Lord PALMERSTON highly acceptable. But throughout it was a wrathful attempt to make himself appear the victim of conspiracy and selfish faction, and when he resumed his seat many who had believed that the division would go against Ministers, began to entertain doubts, as if Ministers had been more damaged by the Premier's speech than by any other consideration. These doubts were strengthened by the cheers which saluted Mr. DISRAELI's exposure of the Premier's weakness; and the announcement made some minutes afterwards that Ministers had fallen, really appeared to surprise no one but Mr. CORDEN himself, whose highest expectations, we believe, had not calculated upon this result.

Yes, the Administration of Lord PALMERSTON has fallen! Such is the news which, by this time, speeds its way all over Europe; and such is the answer which the House of Commons gives to those who impute injustice and inhumanity to England. It has fallen because of its sheer mischievousness and total inadaptation for times of peace; but it did not fall without courageous efforts and struggles for existence which are worthy of better men and of a higher cause. We do not doubt that throughout the many months of its existence it was entirely and conscientiously patriotic, and carried out its own views of ministering to the greatness and glory of our country with a high hand, but in our estimation with false and dangerous principles; and the cheers which heralded the news of its defeat in Westminster Hall and Palace-yard by an excited multitude, will this day, we are certain, be reciprocated by the great mass of our fellow-countrymen in every town and county.

Mr. DISRAELI accepted the construction put upon the motion, that it was a vote of censure upon the Government, not upon the officials in China, and he thought Sir JOHN BOWRING had been unfairly treated in the debate; if his conduct had been ratified by the Government it should not be impugned by the House. The question, he said, was not one of law, but of policy, the policy of the Government, which was by force, not by diplomatic action, to extend our commercial relations with the East; and the House was called upon to express its opinion upon this dangerous policy. He commented, in a strain of sarcasm, upon the alarm at a supposed combination manifested by Lord PALMERSTON, who, he said, was the very archetype of political combination without principle. Let the noble Lord, he continued, who complained that he was the victim of a conspiracy, not only complain to the country, but let him appeal to it.

Mr. CORDEN replied at some length, indignantly repudiating the supposition that he was actuated by factious or anti-English motives. In his opinion, the fall of the Government would lead to a more economical one.

The house then divided, and the numbers were:

For the motion	263
Against it	247
Majority against the Government	16

As soon as the Clerk at the table handed to Mr. CORDEN the paper containing the statement of the numbers, and it was seen that the Government was defeated, there was a loud cheer, which was suspended while the numbers were announced; but after their announcement it was repeated, and continued for some minutes.

THE CHINA WAR.

Attempt of the Chinese to Retake a Fort—Massacre on Board the Thistle—Rebel Movements—Affairs at Hong Kong—Attempt to Poison the Foreigners—Markets, &c.

Hong Kong (Jan. 14) Correspondence of the London Times.

At Canton, little change has taken place since I addressed you on the 30th December. Our troops remain intrenched in the Garden. Her Majesty's steamer Niger, with the flag of Admiral SEYMOUR, is at anchor off the ruins of the factories; and the other men-of-war are distributed in the river, commanding the most important points. Several exceedingly well-planned attempts have been made to blow up and burn our vessels; and, although they have been as yet unsuccessful in doing any material injury, the greatest vigilance is necessary. The mandarins have collected a large number of war junks in the creeks of the river; and on the 4th they attacked the Macao Fort at low water. Her Majesty's steamer Encounter attempted to move down from her anchorage, but grounded, and the fight was maintained by the fort, the steamer Coromandel, and men-of-war's boats, until the rise of the tide enabled the steamer to come [illegible] when the [illegible] men-of-war could not safely [illegible] but it was brilliantly repelled. [illegible] Sir MICHAEL SEYMOUR had thought it wise to abandon his posts at the Dutch Folly and the Factory Gardens, and had strengthened his position at forts lower down the river. Five hundred men were expected from Singapore.

THE MASSACRE ON BOARD THE THISTLE.

(From the Friend of China, January 3.)

On Wednesday evening, news reached Hong Kong of a frightful tragedy. This was the cold-blooded murder of the captain, officers, foreign crew, and passengers, of the postal steamer Thistle—in all eleven souls. The particulars of this dreadful deed having been obtained from Chinese who escaped, and who during the act will most probably have been in such a fright that but little power was left for observation, are imperfect, and in some respects conflicting. The intelligence as first gleaned, was as follows:—

With the shot-holes in her bows, and stack temporarily plugged, Captain WEMYSS, undaunted by the attack on him on the night of the 22d ult., again proceeded with the Thistle, on Sunday last, on his customary voyage to Canton. The up trip was concluded successfully. On the way down, the water being low in French River, the vessel took the mud, and so choked her feed-pipes that a little below Whampoa, on Tuesday morning, it became necessary to anchor for the purpose of cleaning them. At half-past ten in the forenoon of that day the steamer Shamrock came up, and after ascertaining that nothing was required, she took in tow her Majesty's steam sloop Hornet's boat, previously alongside the Thistle, and proceeded on. Stopping only a couple of hours in Canton, the Shamrock again reached Whampoa by dusk on Tuesday evening, and was hardly at anchor when information was brought to the pilot to the effect that the Thistle had been taken into Second Bar Creek, and set on fire, and that the foreigners on board had been decapitated. When first told of what had occurred, Captain WOON thought that the report was merely that of the vessel getting aground, or of the previous attack on her. Early next morning, however, the pilot, who had requested permission to go on shore, alleging that his father was dead, came off secretly and earnestly implored Captain WOON to turn all the Chinese passengers on shore, for, he asserted, he was sure it was their intention to take the vessel in the same way the Thistle had been captured.

At daylight all doubt regarding the truth of the report was put at rest by the appearance of three of the Chinese servants of the Thistle, who then told the following tale: The steamer, they said, had not been long under way when the captain left the upper deck with a Manila-man seacunny at the wheel, and proceeded towards the engine-room hatchway, where he was in the act of stooping forward, looking down, when an assassin from behind stabbed him with one of those short-pointed swords of which every Chinese householder in Hong Kong has one or more pairs. The first engineer, Mr. ABRAHAM, an American, was on the other side of the hatchway at the time, and was similarly assailed; two Manila men seacunnies were working at a hand pump below, and soon shared the same fate; one man got into one of the coal bunkers, and there, afterwards, unable to get out when the vessel was set on fire, was burnt. A passenger in the cabin—a Portuguese gentleman, whose name we do not publish until further assured of the identity—together with his servant, a Portuguese, were also murdered, as was a sick artilleryman, who was lying down forward, and who was the first victim. The captain on being stabbed ran aft, but fell before he reached the cabin door. The mate (FERNSON) succeeded in getting into the cabin, and fired several muskets at the wretches as they attempted to get hold of him. A stinkpot thrown into the cabin at last drove him overboard, and he must have been drowned, as he was never seen to rise. The Manilla man at the wheel was killed from behind, without seeing the hand that wielded the weapon. In all, as we have said, eleven persons were thus disposed of, and search was made for the Chinese boys employed in the cabin, one of whom, by jumping overboard and hiding under the counter of the vessel, succeeding in escaping, as did the others in other ways. The Chinese firemen were then directed to remain at their work, and the vessel was steered up the creek called by the Chinese Chowmee, to the village of Lamkongtow, distant some half a dozen miles inland. There her wood work was set on fire, and when that was destroyed, every particle of brass work that could be removed was taken away; in fact, the vessel is so much disabled that it is questionable whether it is worth while to repair her. The assassins, said to have numbered under a dozen in all, lost no time in walking off with the heads of their victims in handkerchiefs, and at Canton, we suppose, will receive the rewards said to be offered for such commodities by the gentry and people.

Having turned all the Chinese passengers out of the Shamrock, as suggested by the pilot, Captain WOON started for Hong Kong, first communicating the above to the Hornet, off Sunchow, and to the men-of-war lying at the Bogue.

The other of the postal steamers, the Rose, on her [illegible] the [illegible] Chinese, who had been received on board as passengers for Hong Kong, but proved to be emissaries of the Chinese Government hired to perform the tragedy in which they succeeded. All on board were murdered with the exception of some Chinese passengers, and the vessel was then run ashore and burnt. There were two foreign passengers on board at the time, viz.: a Spanish gentleman, Señor DIAZ, formerly Peruvian Consul-General, and an invalid of the 59th Regiment.

Since this dreadful occurrence another river steamer has been attacked and narrowly escaped capture at the hands of a mandarin fleet, and communication with Canton is now almost entirely suspended. There are no foreign residents there now whatever. No trace has been obtained of Mr. GOWRAN, who was kidnapped at Whampoa. A cold-blooded murder has been perpetrated there, the victim being a German servant of Dr. BYRNE. The Whampoa anchorage has been abandoned.

It is not expected that any active measures will be taken against the city of Canton until the arrival of troops and gunboats places in the hands of Admiral SEYMOUR the means of striking a decisive blow both by land and water. At present it is by no means an easy task to hold his present position; but this, we doubt not, he will do if possible, as any retrograde movement would be deemed a victory by the Chinese.

Of the Viceroy YEH we have heard nothing lately, nor has any Commissioner arrived from Pekin, although the Chinese assert that a very high official is on the way.

Of the rebels in the South we have no intelligence beyond a rumor that they have come to an understanding with YEH, and combined to "expel the barbarian!" Whether this be true or not, it is a peculiar fact that they do not seem to take advantage of the present state of affairs to press the Imperialists anywhere near Canton.

In Hong Kong all remains quiet as yet, and the stringent precautions which have been taken have had a beneficial effect. Some of the worst characters have been apprehended, and will be deported. Three men have been seized who are doubtless emissaries from Canton, sent here with mischievous intent. The result of their examination has not yet transpired. The Colonial Government has hired and armed a small steamer to cruise in the neighborhood. The mandarins have issued in various districts the most bloodthirsty edicts against the English, and have offered large rewards to those who may succeed in assassination or incendiarism in Hong Kong. All Chinese have been ordered to quit the service of foreigners and return to their homes, and so powerful is the mandarin system that disobedience entails much trouble, if not positive destruction, upon the relatives of the offender. Nearly all the Chinese servants have left or are leaving, and this creates no small inconvenience, and also renders private property more insecure. Her Majesty's ship Calcutta is in the harbor, and Admiral GUERIN has in the most handsome manner offered the services of the crews of La Virginie and steamer Cassini whenever they may be required; indeed, there is now a French guard stationed at one of the most unprotected points. The Americans have also landed a guard at their naval stores and at another point.

A deputation of merchants waited on His Excellency Sir J. BOWRING on the 5th inst. and presented a letter from those interested in property destroyed or abandoned at Canton or elsewhere, and requested His Excellency's views with reference to compensation. Sir JOHN replied that the matter had been already brought to the attention of the home Government.

We have just received intelligence from Canton informing us that the whole of the suburbs west of the city had been burnt by our force on the 12th inst. In this service we regret to say that a party of the 59th Regiment missed their way, and getting under the city wall were assailed with stones and metal-bolts, losing two men killed, 11 severly wounded, and 10 slightly wounded. A large fire had also taken place inside the city. Admiral SEYMOUR has decided on blowing up the Dutch Folly, retiring from the gardens, and making the Bird's Nest Fort his outpost, where we hope he will be able to remain until reinforcements arrive.

HONG KONG, Thursday, Jan. 15, 1 P. M.—An attempt was made this morning to poison a considerable portion of the foreign community. The author of this diabolical act, is a Chinese baker, named EZING, who (being doubtless induced by the promises of reward held out by the mandarins) mixed with his bread a large quantity of arsenic, and after sending it round to his customers, left for Macao in a steamer at 8 A. M. All who partook of this bread were shortly afterwards seized with violent retchings and other symptoms, but prompt remedies being applied, we are happy to state that up to the present time no deaths have ensued, although great numbers have been ill, and some are still in a dangerous state. The quantity of arsenic was too large to answer the intended purpose, its presence being immediately betrayed, and antidotes forwith administered. It is fearful to contemplate what the results might otherwise have been. A steamer has been despatched to Macao in hopes of intercepting EZING, but we fear he will have gained the mainland ere she arrives.

ATTACK ON BRITISH SHIPPING BY CHINESE JUNKS—ADMIRAL SEYMOUR'S POSITION.

From the London Post.

Official dispatches have been received by the present mail from Sir JOHN BOWRING and Sir MICHAEL SEYMOUR. They give accounts of the attacks made upon the British shipping by a vast number of Chinese junks. The attack, which was well concerted, being made at low water, when the larger men of-war could not safely manoeuvre, was brilliantly repelled. Sir MICHAEL SEYMOUR had thought it wise to abandon his posts at the Dutch Folly and the Factory Gardens, and had strengthened his position at forts lower down the river. Five hundred men were expected from Singapore.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

[illegible] the arrival of the Tennessee we have intelligence from Nicaragua ten or fifteen days later than previous advices, and embracing items of a general kind of interest. Its general tenor sustains what has already been published in the TIMES. Col. LOCKRIDGE has not been able to force his passage up the river, and is no nearer the lake or Walker's Camp than he was a month ago. He has made one or two attempts, however, which proved wholly unsuccessful. Col. TITUS, with a [illegible] force, was detailed to attack Fort Castillo,—but proceeded to the remonstrances of the allies by saying he was defended, and was completely outgeneraled. Indeed charges were rife that he had been bribed. However this may have been, he failed utterly in his attempt, and subsequently displayed anything but the courage of which he has so much boast on the plains of Kansas. WALKER's position at Rivas had been attacked by a large force of the allies, but they had been repulsed with very heavy loss. He has maintained himself with his accustomed courage and obstinacy, and will probably be able to hold his position for some time longer, in spite of the losses which he sustained from the skirmishes and occasional engagements in which he is compelled to engage. The reinforcements which reach him from California will probably make good his losses. The main thing now is to force a passage up the river. If this can be done by Col. LOCKRIDGE and reinforcements that may reach him within a short time, WALKER may yet be saved. The prospect, it must be confessed, is not such as very greatly encourage his friends, though we presume they are by no means prepared to give up the contest.

[illegible] correspondent at Aspinwall sends us a full list from the Adjutant-General of Gen. WALKER's Army, of all the men who at various times have joined his force. This statement, which is highly interesting and important, gives the following summary:

Whole number reported	2,288
Whole number there	2,227
Aggregate deaths	685
Killed in action	131
[illegible]	57
[illegible]	296
[illegible]	223
[illegible]	114
Total remaining in the Army, Feb. 24	788

This does not include Col. LOCKRIDGE's force on the lake, about 300 in all. The whole Walker force in Nicaragua at the present time is thus seen to be not far from 1,000.

By the Africa at Boston we have four days later news from Europe. The news is important. After [illegible] debate in the House of Commons on Mr. DISRAELI's resolution condemning the bombardment of Canton, the vote was taken on the 3d inst., and the Government found itself in a minority of 15. This victory for the Opposition was brought about by a combination of three parties—wide as the poles asunder on every other political question but the one under consideration. The vote is regarded by party journals according to the particular bias of each, but the independent Press of the metropolis look upon it as entirely uncalled for. It seems to be the general opinion that Lord PALMERSTON will not resign, but will dissolve Parliament after the estimates are voted, and then appeal to the country to sustain him in his China policy.

We receive by this arrival, interesting details of [illegible] events at Canton. The Chinese had made a well-planned but unsuccessful effort to retake some of the captured forts. Particulars are also received of the massacre of Europeans on board the [illegible]. On the 12th of January, the British burnt the whole of the suburbs west of Canton, but they do not appear to have resumed operations against the city itself. Admiral SEYMOUR had [illegible] the "Dutch Folly," and was strengthening his position lower down the river. No little alarm was felt by European and American residents for their personal security, and even at Hong Kong the Mandarins were encouraging assassination and incendiarism by large rewards. It is reported in a Paris journal, that the Court of [illegible] prohibited all subjects of the Celestial Empire from speaking of Seattle, from trading with [illegible] between Great Britain and [illegible] have ordered by their respective representatives in Paris on the 3d inst.

[illegible] The Spanish Ministry has addressed [illegible] representatives of Spain at the Ex[illegible] explaining the general [illegible] Large reinforcements are to be added to the squadron at [illegible].

In the State Senate yesterday, a number of [illegible] were presented relative to Trinity Church Affairs; also one from the Mayor and Common Council of this City, against the Metropolitan Police bill. This being the last day for the introduction of bills, under the joint rules, a great [illegible] were introduced in the Assembly,—among them several of interest in this locality. A list of these will be found in our telegraphic summary.

The Executive Committee of the National Agricultural Society met on Wednesday in Louisville, and appointed MARSHAL P. WILDER as President. The next exhibition will be held in Louisville, commencing on the 1st of September.

Quite an excitement was created upon the steamer George Law just previous to her departure for Aspinwall yesterday. It having been whispered that a member of a certain South American house in this City, well known in Wall-street circles, which recently became insolvent, was indebted to the French leave of his creditors, an enterprising creditor resolved that if he could help it he would. Just before the sailing of the steamer, accompanied by a Deputy-Sheriff and a lawyer, he accosted the departing gentleman on the wharf, and attempted to arrest him, when it was found that he (the departing gentleman) was duly accredited as bearer of dispatches to a foreign Government—so no arrest could be made.

The four seamen of the brig General Pierce, charged with the murder of the Captain and crew of the vessel, were committed for trial yesterday by U. S. Commissioner WARREN. The trial will take place at the next term of the United States Circuit Court. The evidence taken on the examination confirmed substantially the story as published in yesterday's TIMES.

[illegible] alleged to have been smuggled upon the steamer Lengel R., by the Fosso brothers, [illegible] yesterday [illegible] by the United States Commissioner.

In the case of MOORE vs. LAWRENCE, the testimony is all put in, and yesterday was occupied by Mr. O'CONOR summing up for the defense. The case will occupy at least another day.

The March term of the Court of Sessions concluded yesterday. A few sentences were passed, and the Grand Jury delivered a presentment to the Judge. The presentment was, perhaps, the most important that has been made by a Grand Jury for a very long period. It related to the confinement of witnesses in prison, undistinguished from ordinary felons, and took the ground that any confinement of witnesses was tyrannical.

The GEORGE W. MILLS case was argued yesterday. Judge DAVIES will render his decision at an early day.

The Brooklyn Common Council's Committee having charge of the proposition to run the City Cars on Sunday met last evening at the City Hall. In presence of a great crowd the question was argued on both sides with very varied ability. In favor of Sunday cars, addresses were made by Judge MORRIS, Rev. Mr. HATCH, Mr. HERMANY, Mr. SMARKEY, Mr. A. S. DUCKERSON, (who presented 10,000 petitioners names in favor he said,) and Mr. HINCKEN. Against it, Ex-Mayor LAWRENCE, JNO. A. DAYTON, Ex-Alderman HOUE, Mr. PERRY and others spoke. A good deal of excitement prevailed toward the close.

Early yesterday morning the body of an unknown man was found upon the Long Island Railroad track, near New-Brooklyn. Deceased must have been run over by a train of cars the evening before. His head was crushed and one arm and one leg broken. From tools found near the deceased it is supposed that he was a repairer of clocks. Further particulars can be obtained of Coroner REDDING, in Brooklyn.

A man residing in the Eastern District of Brooklyn in January last made a complaint against his wife for intoxication and neglecting her family. The case was examined before a Justice and dismissed. The counsel for the wife sued the husband for his fees and, yesterday, before the same court, obtained a verdict in his favor. A new case.

Mayor POWELL, we hear, is about to order the Brooklyn bells rung at 9 of the night, astronomical time, as is the custom already in New-York.

The New-Jersey House of Representatives yesterday refused to take up the resolution to appoint Commissioners to treat with the New-York Commissioners for the removal of Quarantine. The Legislature was expected to adjourn sine die last night.

Our Foreign News.

Our columns are so exclusively occupied this morning with the details of the interesting and important intelligence which reaches us from Europe and Nicaragua, that we must defer comment.

The main feature of the foreign news is the defeat of the Ministry upon the China question. The majority against it was decided, though not large, and it undoubtedly represents the feeling of the country. But it was not generally believed that it would lead to a resignation of the Ministry, or produce any marked effect upon the politics of the day. Lord PALMERSTON is so strong on the general merits of his Administration, and it would be found so very difficult to organize a compact and satisfactory Government from the ranks of the Opposition, that the China question will probably be considered an incidental issue, not affecting the stability of the Administration. The vote will undoubtedly lead to a change of policy in regard to China.

The news from Nicaragua, which is given in great detail in our columns, is interesting rather than important. Col. LOCKRIDGE has not been able, as yet, to force his way up the river, or to make any progress towards reinforcing Gen. WALKER. But he has been thwarted quite as much by the stupidity (not to say the cowardice and treachery) of Col. TITUS, as by any efforts of the opposing Allies. WALKER's position is unchanged; it is stated that he has been attacked by the Allies, but without success. The worst feature of the news, for the friends of WALKER, is the loss of time in relieving him, since his own force is diminished by delay, and rapidity of movement is of the greatest importance for him and his cause. He will still, however, hold out for some time. Whatever else he may lose, he preserves his own indomitable courage and tenacity of purpose.

Sending Money by Mail.

The insecurity of sending money by mail is the great evil of the present postal system of the United States, and some remedy, on the part of the Department or of Congress, is imperatively demanded. The present system must be improved or some new one must be adopted in its stead. The records of the Post-Office at Washington show that the amount purloined annually from the mails is enormous,—and yet only a part of the loss actually sustained is ever known at the Department, many complaints are never made known there, and in a great many cases the requirements of the Department are not complied with. This is of course independent of the missing funds which reach the dead-letter office, and are there returned to the capital owners. The system of Special Agents has done much to detect thefts and probably a good deal also in the way of prevention.

The registry system has proved an utter failure. A person pays five cents to have his letter, enclosing money, registered at the office of deposit, expecting, in his ignorance of the law, that this certificate of registry carries with it some guarantee of safe delivery. But experience convinces him of his error; its only use is to afford proof of actual deposit, and of delivery to the proper person, if it goes through safe. It thus acts as some protection to officials against outside frauds, but it affords no security whatever for the safe transmission of money-letters nor any facilities in tracing those that are lost, owing mainly to the difficulty of enforcing uniform regulations among 26,000 postmasters scattered all over the country. Indeed we have very little doubt that the Registry system actually facilitates frauds on the part of Post-office officials, by pointing out the letters which contain money, and which it is therefore an object to steal. Our own experience leads to this conclusion. We keep a record of all the letters containing money sent to the TIMES, and which never reach us,—so far as we are subsequently advised of their having been sent. The following transcript from that record, for the month of February alone, shows the amount lost and the proportion that were registered:—

Place of Mailing.	Amount.	Place of Mailing.	Amount.
Chatham, Ill...	$5 00 reg.	Chatham, N. Y.	$5 00 reg.

Total amount lost in February	$[illegible] 16
Registered	[illegible] 16
Not registered	$[illegible] 00

It is thus seen that two-thirds of all the lost money during that month was contained in registered letters; and the same thing holds true, so far as our experience goes, throughout the year. The registry system thus adds greatly to the insecurity of mail remittances, and must very speedily be abandoned.

What then shall be done? The English Money Order System is the next resort; and we understand that the late Postmaster-General intended his willingness to try it upon a limited scale and as an experiment. But Congress adjourned without making any provision for even such a trial of it:—and it must also be confessed that the system is open to many objections in this country which do not exist in England. There, every Post-Office is a draft-office: Postmasters are kept in during good behavior:—bank notes are received in payment of money orders, and the extent of country to be covered by the system is comparatively limited. Here bank-notes could not safely be received in payment of money orders:—specie could not be procured in small towns, except at a heavy shave:—drafts drawn on distant offices could be realized only on similar terms:—Postmasters go out with every new Administration, good and bad alike:—much heavier bonds would be required:—the business of the Central department would be very largely increased,—and a great variety of other obstacles would be encountered in the application of the system here, which are not felt abroad.

In spite of all these objections, it is quite likely that the money-order system should be tried. Something, it is very evident, must be done. The people will not endure much longer the miserable inefficiency and insecurity of the present system. If the Government would offer a reward for the plan of remitting money by mail, which should upon examination be deemed the simplest and the best, we are confident the ingenuity of our countrymen would be quite equal to solving the difficulties of the case. JOHN PALMER received a pension from the English Government of £3,000 a year for life, and a gratuity of £50,000 besides, for the simple suggestion in 1783, that the mails could be more safely carried in coaches than on horseback,—which had been the mode previously in vogue. The objects to be accomplished now are certainly important enough to warrant the offer of a liberal reward on the part of Government, for some means of rendering safe and reliable the transmission of money by mail.

Rascaldom.

In his late speech to the Corps Legislatif the Emperor of the French said, with a more determined and positive tone than KING CANUTE used when he commanded the sea to approach no nearer to his royal feet, that the rivers of France must be taught to confine themselves within the limits of their own banks; the Loire and the Rhine were commanded by the Imperial will to keep in their own beds, and not overflow the country to the ruin of the farmers' prospects. The word of the Emperor will, no doubt, give confidence to his subjects who live on the banks of the sometimes turbulent rivers. It was necessary, probably, that some assurance should be given them that the disasters of last Fall should not be repeated, or they might not have had the heart to make preparations for another harvest.

What the Emperor meant was, that all the resources of mechanical art should be employed to prevent another inundation such as devastated the South of France last year; and, if skillful engineering can keep the rivers from overflowing their banks, it will be done. We want just such a potent voice in this City to prevent the turbulent and destructive flood of rascaldom from overflowing and destroying the peace and prosperity of the people. It is much easier to confine a flood of rascality than a flood of water; and it is to the disgrace of a people who permit themselves to be overridden by a small band of prowling villains. The whole number of vicious persons in New-York, who keep the City in a constant excitement of fear, is very small indeed, compared with our population; and so numerous and well organized are our policemen, that they might, in a few hours, arrest every burglar, pickpocket and sneaky on the island. There is not a thief in the City, who is not known and watched, and his haunts and associates familiar to the members of the Police Department. So entirely rather the thieves of the Police are all the rogues, that not a pickpocket dares venture into Wall-street, in the purlieus of the banks, for fear of being arrested on suspicion. They are warned to keep out of temptation and practice their nefarious arts elsewhere. The consequence is, that, though there are better pickings for these chevaliers in Wall-street than in any other part of the City, there are never any pockets picked there by street thieves. If this prohibitory system can be applied to one class of rascals we do not see why it should not be applied to all. The dangerous classes are really very small in numbers, the quarters of the City where they burrow and indulge in their obscene revels are extremely limited, and there would not be much more difficulty in driving them all out of the City, than there is in pounding unmuzzled dogs in Summer. We do not wait for a dog to go mad, before we muzzle him, nor for the yellow fever to spread from a ship before putting her in Quarantine. An ounce of prevention in such cases, is properly considered as worth more than a pound of cure. But, in the case of burglars and pick-pockets it is different. The authorities know that there are nests of rascals who live by dishonest means, but, unless they can be detected in the act of committing a theft they cannot be touched. Discharged convicts come back to their comrades in crime, and watch their opportunities to renew their villanies, and though they are known not to live by any honest means they cannot be arrested until some act is proved against them.

There is no way of expelling a rogue from the City, unfortunately, merely because he is suspected of living by dishonest practices, even where suspicion amounts to absolute conviction. But, when the residence of a rogue is known, he might be arrested and kept in custody until he could be sent to the House of Refuge, or the Penitentiary, for his term, on the ground that he is a vagrant, without being formally convicted of any crime. Let the villains who now infest our City but be convinced that their steps are dogged, and their haunts watched, and they will very soon make choice of some other locality for their exploits, or else betake themselves to honest courses. The new Police Bill, if it should become a law, would so increase the efficiency of our Police Department, by enlarging its jurisdiction and preventing the escape of rogues, that we believe a system might be perfected which would go far to rid City life of one of its greatest terrors and inconveniences, by banishing rogues of the brutal class from amongst us. Of course there will always be a fearful amount of undetected villainy and secret immoralities which the arm of the law cannot reach; but the coarse ruffians who prowl around our houses, and waylay solitary pedestrians, who are the cause of so much terror and uneasiness, can be always held in check and their villainies prevented. There is no more difficulty in tracking them than there would be in tracking a wild bull that had escaped in our streets, and it is not at all creditable to our Police Department that they should be permitted to commit their ravages amongst us.

FALLING OFF AGAIN.—The money article of the Herald grows more and more stupid every day. The "amanuensis" who does the falsehoods for the Editor and Proprietor is not up to his business. He has kept one stereotyped lie a fortnight. The lying department of the Herald, (which embraced nearly the whole of it,) used to be fresh and spicy; but it reads now as if it were edited by a bag of the old bones dug up from the Brick Church lots. Did the Herald slyly buy them up for such uses?

A HOPEFUL SIGN.—The European, which was established for the purpose of publishing all the unfavorable facts to American society, which appear in our papers, has been compelled to reduce its dimensions from lack of material to fill it up with.

A CLEAR CASE.—The Express informs the TIMES that "lies lay." We presume the fact is so:—there is certainly no better or older authority on this particular subject than the Express.

THE MARYLAND AND CALIFORNIA APPOINTMENTS—THE NATIONAL HOTEL TO BE CLOSED.

WASHINGTON, Friday, March 20.

A large delegation from Maryland had an interview with the President this morning relative to the appointments for that State. At their caucus last night it was agreed to recommend Judge J. T. MASON for Collector, though it is understood the President had previously designated him for the office. The delegation are not agreed as to the rotation policy.

The California appointments have been considered by the Cabinet, but have not been consummated.

WM. B. DISHKARD, of Virginia, has been appointed Chief Clerk of the War Department.

The National Hotel will be closed, to-morrow, owing to the bad repute of the establishment from the late prevalent disease.

The New-Jersey Legislature.

TRENTON, Friday, March 20.

The House refused, to-day, to take up the resolution to appoint Commissioners to treat with the New-York Commissioners for the removal of Quarantine.

The Legislature will adjourn sine die about 12 o'clock to-night.

The National Agricultural Society.

LOUISVILLE, Thursday, March 19.

The Executive Committee of the National Agricultural Society met in this city to-day. Col. MARSHALL P. WILDER, of Massachusetts, was chosen President. The next Exhibition of the Society will commence here on September 1, and continue five days.

The Bark Tasmania Ashore.

PORTLAND, Friday, March 20.

The bark Tasmania of Robinston, from Liverpool, via Nassau, N. P., with cargo of salt, iron, etc., drifted ashore last night in the fog near Cape Elizabeth Light. The crew was saved, but the vessel will probably be a total loss.

Railroad Accident near Port Jervis.

PORT JERVIS, Friday, March 20.

Five cars of a freight train were thrown off the track at the bridge near this station, last night, by the spreading of the rails. The trains were detained for a few hours, but are now running regularly.

NEW-YORK LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.....ALBANY, Friday, March 20.

Memorials were presented for and against repeal or modification of the law of 1814, relating to Trinity Church.

The Harbor Commissioners have sent in a supplementary report and map relating to Gowanus Bay.

Mr. NOXON drew attention to an article in the Albany Atlas and Argus, accusing the Committee on Trinity Church Affairs with partial and wrong action, and presented a report wherein the Committee acknowledge there are some inaccuracies in the testimony, but nothing that can alter the conclusion at which they arrive—that the law of 1814 should be amended.

Mr. SWOON presented a memorial from the Mayor and Common Council against the Metropolitan Police bill.

The bill allowing the Industrial Schools of New-York to participate in the distribution of the School moneys, being up for final passage, was recommitted on motion of Mr. WADSWORTH.

The special order being the Liquor bill, they were taken up and debate ensued upon them.

The following bills were passed:

To change the name of the Lafayge Insurance Company.

Relative to applications before Justices for the care of lunatics.

To enlarge the powers of Notaries Public.

To incorporate the New-York Warehousing Company.

ASSEMBLY.....ALBANY, Friday, March 20.

The bills introduced by the Committee on Ways and Means on the Canal Policy was made the special order for Thursday morning.

The bill authorizing the purchase of SARROW & Co.'s Agricultural Works to the amount of $300,000 for District School Libraries, was debated in Committee of the Whole, and supported by Messrs. FRANCISCO, B. OWEN and J. J. OWEN, and opposed by Messrs. VARIAN, LEWIS and HOGEBOOM.

Private relief bills were then considered.

EVENING SESSION.

This being the last day for the introduction of bills under the joint rules, the special order was postponed in order to afford an opportunity for that purpose.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. JOHN J. BAILEY, to legalize the acts of Supervisors in relation to the accounts of Messrs. ROSS and McGILL for furnishing and fitting the room of the Superior Court, New-York.

By Mr. CAMERON, to authorize the purchase of glass ballot boxes.

By Mr. HAWKINS, to authorize the laying down of a railroad in Division-avenue, Brooklyn.

By Mr. SLUYTER, for the protection of emigrants, by licensing steamboats, tugs, &c., to take emigrants from ships and land them at the Emigrant Dock, New-York.

The bill prevents any unlicensed boats landing emigrants, and provides penalties for soliciting emigrants for emigrant boarding houses.

By Mr. HOGEBOOM, to incorporate the American Emigrant Aid Homestead Company.

The bill incorporates REMSEN CORNING, JAMES S. WADSWORTH and others, with a capital of $2,000,000, and authorizing them to purchase lands to colonize in any State or Territory of the Union.

By Mr. LEAVENWORTH, to authorize Banking Associations to reduce their securities to $50,000 upon surrender of their circulation, taking the Schuyler County bill, it was defeated.

Academy of Music.

The last regular night of the season, and the best, gave us MOZART's "DON GIOVANNI." The house was densely crowded, upwards of four thousand dollars being represented in it. The opera was sustained by Madames PARODI, PATTI-STRAKOSCH and MAZZUCATO, with TIBBITT, MORELLI, DUSSEAULT and others.

Between the first and second acts Mr. THALBERG played his fantasia on "L'Elisir d'Amore," and, in response to an encore, his variations on "Home, Sweet Home."

To-night there will be a grand miscellaneous entertainment, in which D'ANGRI, JOHANNSEN, PARODI, PATTI-STRAKOSCH, DE WILHORST, will assist, with THALBERG and the members of the Company.

From the Jurors on the Burdell Case Concerning Dr. Wallers Testimony.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

An article has appeared in several of the papers, stating that great importance was attached to the testimony of Dr. D. C. WALLER. We, as members of the Jury, wish to state to the public that such was not the case, so far as we were concerned. It was evident to us, after asking him a few questions, that he was under some strange hallucination in regard to the matter that he wished to testify to, and we were prepared for it from information given us by one of our number, who had an interview with some of the members of his family beforehand.

We think it would not be very difficult for Mrs. CUNNINGHAM's Counsel to prove that his testimony is of no value, as no sensible person, after hearing him talk on this subject could doubt for a moment that he was acting under some strange delusion.

Farewell Address of Governor Geary.

To the People of Kansas Territory.

Having determined to resign the Executive office, and retire again to the quiet scenes of private life, and the enjoyment of those domestic comforts of which I have so long been deprived, I deem it proper to address you on the occasion of my departure.

The office from which I now voluntarily withdraw was unsought by me, and at the time of its acceptance was by no means desirable. This was quite evident from the deplorable moral, civil and political condition of the Territory—the discord, combustion and deadly strife which then did there prevail—and the painful anxiety with which it was regarded by patriotic citizens in every portion of the American Union. To attempt to govern Kansas at such a period, and under such circumstances, was to assume no ordinary responsibilities. Few men could have desired to undertake the task, and none would have been so presumptuous, without serious forebodings as to the result. That I should have hesitated is no matter of astonishment to those acquainted with the facts; but that I accepted the appointment was a well grounded source of regret to many of my well-tried friends, who looked upon the enterprise as one that could terminate in nothing but disaster to myself. It was not supposed possible that order could be brought, in any reasonable space of time, and with the means at my command, from the then existing chaos.

Without descending upon the feelings, principles and motives which prompted me, suffice it to say, that I accepted the President's tender of the office of Governor. In doing so, I sacrificed the comforts of a home, endeared by the strongest earthly ties and most sacred associations, to embark in an undertaking which promised at the best but a dark and unsatisfactory prospect. I reached Kansas and entered upon the discharge of my official duties in the most gloomy hour of her history. Desolation and ruin reigned on every hand; homes and firesides were deserted; the smoke of burning dwellings darkened the atmosphere; women and children, driven from their habitations, wandered over the prairies and among the woodlands, or sought refuge and protection even among the Indian tribes. The highways were infested with numerous predatory bands, and the towns were fortified and garrisoned by armies of conflicting partisans, each exciting almost to frenzy, and determined upon mutual extermination. Such was, without exaggeration, the condition of the Territory at the period of my arrival. Her treasury was bankrupt. There were no pecuniary resources within herself to meet the exigencies of the time. The Congressional appropriation, intended to defray the expenses of a year, were insufficient to meet the demands of a fortnight. The laws were null, the Courts virtually suspended, and the civil arm of the Government almost entirely powerless. Action—prompt, decisive, energetic action—was necessary. I at once saw what was needed, and without hesitation gave myself to the work. For six months I have labored with unceasing industry. The accumulated fatigue of hundred hours far sleep have been employed in the public service. Night and day have official duties demanded unremitting attention. I have had no proper leisure moments for recreation. My health has failed under the pressure. Nor is this all; to my own private purse, without assurance of reimbursement, have I resorted, in every emergency, for the required funds. Whether these arduous services and willing sacrifices have been beneficial to Kansas and my country, you are abundantly qualified to determine.

That I have met with opposition, and even bitter vituperation, and vindictive malice, is no matter of astonishment. No man has ever yet held an important or responsible post in our own or any other country, and escaped censure. I could have been very weak and foolish, indeed, had I expected to pass through the fiery ordeal entirely uncensured, especially as I was required, if not to come in conflict with, at least to thwart evil machinations, and hold in restraint wicked partisans, or rid the Territory of many lawless, reckless, and desperate men. Besides, it were impossible to come in contact with the conflicting interests which governed the counties of multitudes, and not be thwarted, and incur the enmity of those whose designs were thus defeated. While that feeling was, of course, deleterious to my official influence, it would have been delinquent in duty on the part of a public officer to disregard public sentiment, and, forever, palliate or excuse the misdeeds of those who, by their conduct, had forfeited the confidence and esteem of the people. Executive patronage, in a Territory, is but a feeble lever, and the exercise of my authority, and unshrinking fidelity to the interests of my country, and unshrinking fidelity to the interests of my country, and unshrinking fidelity to the interests of my country

Demonstrated by the following testimonial:
BALTIMORE, Wednesday, March 11, 1857.
GENTLEMEN: We are happy to say that our Books and Papers, destroyed in one of your Safes, came out of the fire in the burning of our warehouse, No. 15 Bevis's Wharf, on the 1st inst., without injury, being preserved in perfect order. The heat was intense, as the warehouse contained large quantities of whisky, cotton, &c., and the account from the second floor, and was given hours to the fire. We have already purchased of your agents a [illegible] of the same kind.
CHAPLAIN & JONES.
STILL ANOTHER—Take More Test.
STEARNS & MARVIN:
[illegible] the morning of the 10th of last December, my store, with others, was destroyed by fire, but on removing our
STEARNS & MARVIN SAFE
from the rubbish, I found my books, cash and valuable papers, to the amount of about seven thousand dollars, in [illegible] order. Yours truly,
JOHN CANAVAN.

FARMS FOR SALE.

UNITED STATES LAND SALE—SALES of land, by order of the President, will take place on MONDAY, May 4, at the Land Offices in Osage, Fort Dodge and Sioux City, Iowa, when 1,500,000 acres will be placed in market by the Government.
In consequence of the large grants which have been made to Railroad Companies, and the withdrawal from market of a like quantity adjoining, this sale will comprise nearly all the unsold land of first quality remaining in Iowa. The lands now offered are mostly situated in the Valley of the Boone and Des Moines Rivers, and are considered among the best farming lands in the West. They are well watered and timbered, well located as regards climate and facilities for reaching market, the Dubuque and Sioux City and Missouri Railroad, now partly constructed, will, when finished, afford a ready means of access, and a corresponding increase in their value.
We have reliable agents who will attend the sales at each of the offices, and select lands for parties desirous of investing, and as they are men of long experience in the business, we have every confidence in their judgment.
We will secure funds for investment in lands, and give every information regarding charges, &c., and when it is desirable to use land warrants, furnish them at the best market prices.

[illegible] BY WALKER [illegible]

[Correspondence of The Times.]

[illegible] Hill's Hill, and a number of pairs of [illegible] ornamented with a red stripe; [illegible] had formerly belonged to General [illegible], but fell into the hands of the [illegible] when they gained possession of the [illegible]. One of the enemy was found in the [illegible] and killed; being severe [illegible] he had been left behind by [illegible]. We gave information that the Costa [illegible] attack of the 7 [illegible] in question. In giving some account of [illegible] that he had formerly labored in a [illegible], and had been impressed into the service [illegible] Walker and his associates out of the country, he had continued to fight only from a fear [illegible] should he refuse. His greatest [illegible] was that he was not immediately [illegible] a band of blood-thirsty vil[illegible] and roasting all they didn't [illegible]. The poor Costa Rican was not only [illegible] free, but was highly pleased [illegible] he received, and declared [illegible] to fight against [illegible].

[illegible] was one of a scouting-party of 10 [illegible] to break the retiring Costa Ricans, di[illegible] was taken. Lieut. Munzer, late [illegible]—made a Lieutenant by Captain [illegible] to command. They followed the [illegible] along the Serapiqui river, and at [illegible] from Sarapiqui found huts, [illegible] while holding the fort had [illegible] as well as other directions, to [illegible]. One of these hats the body a Cos[illegible], who had evidently died from [illegible] and been left behind by his party, [illegible] two stands-of-arms and 10 flint-lock [illegible] thrown away by the [illegible] to facilitate flight. After penetrating a dis[illegible] miles through the brushwood with the [illegible] in many places knee-deep, the party returned to the fort.

Ryan's account of what he saw and experienced during his short stay in Nicaragua is not exactly [illegible] to rose. It rained, he said, about half the time, and that was what they pretended to call the dry season. As to food, the men at Serapiqui had a plenty of beans, biscuits, beans, rice, &c., but they were [illegible] off for clothing. He himself was not [illegible] Walker's Commissariat for a shred, and [illegible] he made application for a pair of the [illegible] mentioned, failed to get one, as he [illegible] and they had been previously distributed to [illegible]. Even a blue shirt, of which a few [illegible] to be had at one time, he was unable to [illegible] of, and was compelled to get along on the march without a change of raiment. And to sleep without cots and the ground without a blanket, being on guard at night pretty often, and [illegible] during the day, soon gave him a dislike of Walker and Nicaragua life.

Immediately after the fort was taken, he says, it was [illegible] to repair the fortification and re[illegible] the place. The enemy had left the place in so [illegible] that it took two days to clean it out. The [illegible] better, Colonel Anderson occupied a cottage about 50 yards distant from the [illegible] the quarters of the Costa Rican Commander of the fort.

After describing the elephant without glasses and to his heart's content, Ryan found himself ready to [illegible] the service, though he still liked the [illegible] and would enjoy it again, he says, under [illegible] circumstances. As good luck would have it, he was dismissed to Greytown with others on board the Sierra Nevada for provisions and munitions, when the commander of the British squadron sent an officer and boat's crew to demand the discharge of any subjects of Her Majesty, who might happen to be on board. He besides himself claimed the protection of the officer, and were accordingly taken off from the steamer. He remained in Greytown until the departure of the British steamer Clyde, in which vessel he was conveyed to Aspinwall, and thence [illegible] this City by the Tennessee. Ryan's wardrobe had not been at all improved when we saw him yesterday, since he left Serapiqui.

[illegible] Statements from Miscellaneous [illegible]—Condition of Walker's Army.

An intelligent Californian, who was a passenger by the Sierra Nevada, says there were about 75 recruits for Walker from California landed at San Juan del Sur on the 6th of March. Some half-dozen of them had deserted themselves away on reaching San Juan, and thus escaped from enlistment in the army.

A train of pack mules, with provisions, wine, &c., is landed for Walker, started out of San Juan del Sur on the night of 6th, and were met by a force of Costa Ricans, who captured all the pack mules, and killed all of the party, when they fell back upon the town, and waited for the reinforcement from the army, as aforesaid.

As soon as the recruits were landed, they were put under a short drill of about an hour on the beach, and were then sent off in company with an escort that had made the previous unsuccessful attempt to open the road to Rivas; it was supposed this squad would find business in their line in two or three hours' travel, as the Allies were posted along the road, for the purpose of intercepting reinforcements and supplies. On the 7th, just as the steamer sailed from San Juan, it was currently reported that the Allies had made three attacks upon Walker's position, in force, and that they had been repulsed with a loss of from four to five hundred men, whilst Walker did not lose a man. The Allies had drawn off, retreating to San Jorge, two miles from Rivas, where their force was variously estimated from 600 to 1,500 men. There was no definite information from the Atlantic side, and all they knew of the operations on the river was what had been brought up from Panama by the present steamer. It was quite certain that Lockridge had not effected a passage up to the Lake, as it was admitted the two steamers on the Lake were still in possession of the enemy, and no change in their direction had taken place.

Mr. Tanner, of San Francisco, who came passenger in the Sierra Nevada and Tennessee, had an interview with Mr. Fauser, the American Consul (of the Walker Government) at San Juan, on the day of their arrival, who represented Walker's position as unchanged; that he was strongly fortified at Rivas, and only needing supplies of men and munitions to hold his own, and ultimately to conquer the country. The 75 recruits, with arms and ammunition, had been dispatched to Rivas, and if they succeeded in fighting their way through, would make an important addition to his strength. And the truth is, Mr. Tanner says, that Walker was decidedly in a very serious position, though he thinks he will maintain himself.

A gentleman friend of Walker's Government, who came by the Tennessee, and who prefers that his name should not appear, left Rivas in company with a [illegible] on the 4th inst., at which time every thing [illegible] as at previous accounts: Walker was entrenched at Rivas, and fortified, as he does not believe in fortifications, but ready to repel attacks, which at the last report are done with the bayonet, a kind of exercise not relished by the allied army, and which cannot be induced to fight as a general thing, except behind impregnable walls. Walker's effective force on the 4th of March was about 300 men; the total number, including those in hospitals, being about 1,100.

Gen. Walker takes all his reverses philosophically. Nothing daunts, surprises or alarms him. He keeps up all the pretence of Government; convening regularly his Cabinet ministers, conferring with them upon all important movements, and everything moving on with the utmost precision. He says he has force of character sufficient to carry himself and those associated with him through any crisis, and he will maintain himself in his present position as long as there is anything to eat within ten or twenty miles of the town. All the tropical fruits are found in luxurious abundance, plantains are rotting on the ground, and he cannot be starved out. Without the aid of [illegible] reinforcements, his position must be stationary. He makes one foraging parties two and three times a day, which tell on brushes in getting all they [illegible]. Meanwhile, [illegible] the rainy season is over, and the sickly season has commenced, the country is [illegible] and [illegible] and again being the prevailing diseases [illegible] the attacking [illegible] in eating and drinking, and the irregular habits of the recruits, many of whom [illegible] those are not chargeable to the climate, which he describes as the best in the world.

The old adobe dwellings in which the soldiers are quartered he describes decidedly unhealthy, as they are filled with vermin and filth. Lizards, centipedes, and tarantulas also run riot through them.

The news of the natives regard the operations of Walker, and also of the allied forces against him, with the most sublime indifference, apparently caring little which succeeds. They are generally ready to do anything if not required to fight, as they have been engaged in that business for thirty-five years, as the tools of contending factions, without any perceptible benefit, they have been disgusted with it. Walker, understanding this feeling, does not require them to take up arms. On the contrary, the allies carry an wholesale conscription. Their method is to visit a Hacienda, and seizing all the males, they tie their arms behind them, and march them off to join their ranks; the consequence is they take no interest in the contest going on, they fight with no spirit, and desert in squads when the first opportunity offers.

The allies have intelligent and able commanders among them, German, French, and even American: there are, also, some well educated native leaders. If Walker is driven out, (which he don't believe he will be) there will be the most horrible excesses practiced that were ever known of in any country. So he thinks Walker is very severe on deserters, which he says is the only way an army could be kept together; if full opportunity were given the foreigners, most of them would no doubt desert, as matters now are, but the Americans would not. He gives the following instance of Walker's mode of treating deserters: Four stragglers were found on the road to Costa Rica; they were all arrested, and carried before Walker, among them was a Frenchman, who was showing them the road, and assisting them on the way; he was examined, found guilty and shot on the Plaza in an hour; but the others were given a lighter punishment, and saved for the ranks.

THE RUMORED ATTACK ON RIVAS.

On the day the Sierra Nevada sailed from San Juan, it was currently reported that the Allies had made a night attack upon Walker's position; the whole force charging first up the street on which the ordnance department is situated, but they were here met by a murderous discharge of cannister and round shot from a six and a four-pounder, which drove them back. They then charged a strong position at the rear of the town, where they were again repulsed by the First Infantry, at the point of the bayonet. The third and last attack was made on a street leading directly to the main plaza, where they were met by a quick discharge of cannister and shot, when they fell back, and beat a retreat to San George.

As there was nothing unlikely in these reports, he supposed they were correct.

A DISGUSTED FILLIBUSTER.

One of the most notable representatives from the camp of Walker, is an Irishman, by the name of Kelly, who has held a Lieutenant's commission in the Army of Liberation, almost from the time that Walker entered Nicaragua. He is quite an old man, and having fallen under the suspicion of intending to desert, suffered a court-martial, two months of imprisonment in irons, starvation, and other ills too numerous to mention, winding up with a passport, and an order to leave the country on the first steamer, on pain of being shot. He calls Walker a despot a hundred times worse than Nicholas, of Russia, ever dared to be; that he has ruined his cause in Nicaragua by his tyrannical and blundering conduct, and that his ignominious reign is rapidly drawing to a close. Mr. Kelly has a journal of the transactions in which he figured, embracing a period of two months, and memoranda of the operations of Walker, which he was obliged to keep concealed by burying it in the earth, until he escaped out the country. He met with much trouble on board the steamers, on account of the annoyances of Walker's officers, and at Key West had a fight with one of them in a bar-room, in consequence of which he came near losing his passage—the officer in question threatening that he would take vengeance on him if he came on board. He was ordered ashore by the captain, but by the solicitations of the California passengers, was finally allowed to return.

VERY LATE FROM THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PANAMA, Tuesday, March 10, 1857.

We have nothing since my last of interest, locally. Below you will find all matters of any importance from the South Coast. The U. S. sloop-of-war Decatur arrived here yesterday, 64 days from San Francisco.

PERU.

THE REVOLUTION LIKELY TO PROVE A FAILURE—RESIGNATION OF CASTILLA'S CABINET—A NEW ONE APPOINTED—REPORT ON THE GUANO TRADE, ETC.

Up to the 27th ultimo, nothing had occurred in Peru to change the opinion I have held for the past two months that the revolution of Vivanco against Castilla will prove a failure. There had been no fighting in any portion of the Republic except at Picora in Piura. About the 20th Gen. Caravedo, who was appointed Governor of Paita and the Province of Piura by Vivanco, and who you will recollect was expelled from Paita about the 6th, returned in the Tumbes, steamer, with 200 men, and again took possession. The government forces consisted of three or four hundred volunteers. Gen. Caravedo took possession of Picora after six hours' fighting, loss of killed and wounded being considerable on both sides.

The Apurimac, steam-frigate, had taken possession of the Government brig Almirante Guise, of 6 guns, without resistance. This is all the war-news.

Castilla's Cabinet had all resigned, because they could not accord with the President on important questions, and the following-named gentlemen were appointed:

Secretary of State—Don Manuel Ortik Zavallos.

Minister of Justice—Don Luciano Maria Cano.

Minister of the Interior—Don Juan Ignacio Orna, at present Minister to the United States.

Secretary of the Treasury—Don Francisco Rivera, at present Minister to Great Britain.

Governor of Callao—Gen. Don Jose Maria Plaza.

The report upon the guano trade shows that, in eleven months of 1855, the total amount of the fertilizer exported was 256,981 tons register, which produced to the Treasury $8,301,897. Of this, 228,154 tons, of 2,240 pounds, went to England; 18,985 tons to France; 70,429 tons to the United States; 1,920 tons to Asia; and 9,422 tons to Spain.

In 1856 the total production was $8,852,445. Of this amount 170,400 tons went to England; 98,798 to the United States; and 13,480 to France. Total net proceeds in two years, $16,605,442.

The receipts from customs in Peru in 1855 amounted to $9,766,814 18. In 1856, $9,979,586 67.

The National Convention has under consideration the following appropriations: $200,000 to assist the people in various departments in opening new roads and communications; $100,000 to survey rivers, with a view to facilitate communication with the Atlantic; $100,000 to open and improve roads in the mountains. These appropriations were voted unanimously.

PROGRESS OF THE SANTIAGO RAILROAD—BUSINESS—SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE, ETC.

On the 19th of February there was a general meeting of the shareholders in the Valparaiso and Santiago Railroad, at which an interesting report was made on the state and progress of the road. The line, as far as Quillota, nearly 34 miles, is finished, with the exception of the San Pedro tunnel, which has been contracted for at the rate of $168,000, and will be opened the whole length at the end of the present month. The total amount expended thus far is $4,160,912 41, an average cost of $124,695 per mile. This great cost arises from changes in the direction of the line, unforeseen accidents, &c. From this amount must be deducted the value of a considerable quantity of materials on hand, construction of workshops, stonehouses, and other buildings for the whole line as far as Santiago, as well as the value of the lands acquired in Valparaiso. The road, as far as opened, is paying better than was expected. The Government is to continue the line from Quillota to Santiago. To show the interest excited in this enterprise, it is stated that it being cheaper to leave the little town of Limache at about a mile and a half distant, the people got together and subscribed $24,000 towards building a branch line. On other parts of the road, efforts are also making to establish branches.

The expenses of Valparaiso for the present year are estimated at $269,140; of Santiago, $368,467.

The British ship Lord George Bentinck, from Shields for San Francisco, was lost at sea, going down in lat. 40° S. and lon. 80° W. Sixteen of the crew were saved and taken to the Malvinas Islands.

Business had been a little better the last fortnight.

Freights in good request, and the tonnage in port is gradually decreasing. Sales of Chilean Crushed Sugar, 31 reals per arroba. A quantity of English fire-brick from the United States brought $24; Hamburg, $22. The market is overstocked with poor descriptions of lumber; good was worth $50 to $55. Freights—Grain to load at Calderas for Liverpool, £3 17s. 6d.

The U. S. sloop-of-war John Adams sailed on the 11th February for Callao, to touch at Arica.

There is nothing from Ecuador, Bolivia, or the River Plate Provinces. F. W. R.

LONDON CORDIAL GIN,
MEDICATED SCHNAPPS, &C.
Caution to the Public.

After several years' experimenting in the manufacturing of Gin, I fortunately succeeded, in the year 1846, in making a discovery in its manufacture by which it was deprived of all acid and inflammatory properties, and rendered perfectly pure.

My manufactory is at Schiedam, Holland. After several months' reflection what title to give it, I introduced it to the American public under the name of "Wolfe's Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps." Schiedam is the name of the place in Holland where the Gin is manufactured. Aromatic derives its name from the Italian Juniper Berry with which it is flavored, and the word "Schnapps" is the German word for drink—Cogue Dram—Wolfe's Schiedam Aromatic Drink. No sooner had my Schnapps been introduced to the American public, and received with approbation, than the liquor mixers of New-York, Boston and Philadelphia started in pursuit with their mixed and poisonous stuff, under various names; Schiedam Gin, Schiedam Schnapps, London Club House Gin, London Cordial Gin, Medicated Schnapps, &c., and in several instances my labels have been so perfectly imitated, with only the addition of a few letters, to plead a technical avoidance of the law, and so carefully prepared, as to impose on careless purchasers. I understand a large quantity has been purchased by the merchants of the Southern and Western States, on account of the cheapness of the article. A merchant who participates indirectly in the fraud, by selling the spurious article, is as much an offender as the principal who planned the imposition.

I hope every respectable citizen who values the health of the community in which he lives will aid me in ferreting out and exposing the unscrupulous merchant, who, for the sake of a few cents, will put into jeopardy the lives of the community in which he lives. Such men should be nailed to the pillory of popular execration.

WOLFE'S SCHIEDAM AROMATIC SCHNAPPS.

It is made from barley of the finest quality, selected with great care from the products of the most celebrated grain-growing districts, is flavored with the essence of the Aromatic Juniper Berry of Italy, and is rectified by a peculiar process which expels from the spirit every acid particle.

As a means of preventing and correcting the disagreeable, and often dangerous, effects produced upon the stomach and bowels by a change of water—a vexation to which travellers and settlers, and all unacclimated persons in the West, the South, and the South-West, are peculiarly liable—the Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps will be found absolutely infallible, while, in cases of dropsy, gravel, obstruction of the kidneys, disease of the bladder, dyspepsia, and general debility, it is recommended most emphatically by the most distinguished members of the medical profession.

It is put up in quart and pint bottles, in cases of one dozen, with the name of the undersigned on the bottle and cork, and a fac-simile of his signature and label.

For sale by all respectable druggists and country merchants. UDOLPHO WOLFE,
Nos. 18, 20 and 25 Beaver-street, New-York.

FRIDAY, March 20—P. M.

There is no change in Money affairs to-day. The supply works easy for the Brokers, and the leading firms have Money left with them, on temporary use, at 7 ⅌ cent., quite freely. Discounts are a little easier on strictly first-class paper, 9 ⅌ cent., while fair or sound choice names go at 10 ⅌ cent. We understand that a large amount of Specie will be shipped to Europe next week, in addition to the $1,000,000 already engaged for Liverpool. The steamer to-morrow in the Boston and Southampton packet, Hermann. The Sub-Treasury received, to-day, $148,946; disbursed $151,095; and held, at the close, $15,589,428. The telegraphic dispatches from the steamer Alps, at Boston from Liverpool March 8, are to the effect that the English Funds have advanced to 93¼ for money, 94¼@⅝ for the account; the French Funds up 1 ⅌ cent., the Rente selling at 70.90 for money, and 71.45 for the account; and Money easier in London, in the Stock circles. The Liverpool Cotton market steady, and Grain a Rifle lower. The Tea market had further advanced on the last dispatches from China, where the troubles at Canton look more serious than ever. The hostility to the English had extended to Singapore.

The Stock Market was ⅜ ⅌ cent. lower on Illinois Central, ¼ ⅌ cent. lower on Erie, ⅛ ⅌ cent. lower on Reading, and barely sustained on other descriptions. The speculation for a decline in Illinois Central noticed yesterday, on the announcement of the new apportionment of Stock, increased to-day, and there was, also, about 1,000 shares cash Stock sold. Opinions are unsettled as to the ultimate effect of the new arrangement. It is understood to have been determined on consultation with, if not on the suggestion of, some of the heaviest New-York and English holders, and there is this consideration in determining the policy of the measure to be set off against the first impulse of the Stock Exchange. One thing is already evident—that we are to have a much more active speculation in the Stock in consequ
